The Task Force on a Drug-Free Workplace has as its mission to place into the arena of public debate a well-reasoned, well-drafted, balanced model statute setting forth the substantive and procedural rules that ought to govern drug-testing in the workplace. The task force members come from a wide variety of constituencies and perspectives, including corporate management, organized labor, public health, law enforcement, and the judiciary. Paul Marcus of the University of Arizona College of Law is the chairman.

Over the past year the members have examined legal and policy issues surrounding the national effort to achieve a "Drug-Free Workplace" in both the public and private sectors. The report is scheduled for release in November, 1990.
