The Institute of Bill of Rights Law was established in 1982 at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law to support scholarly research in the constitutional principles contained in the Bill of Rights, particularly the First Amendment. The Institute also supports work in the history of the Bill of Rights, and sponsors programs to facilitate interaction between the professions of law and journalism.

A free press plays a unique role in our society. It is a bulwark of our political system, insuring that the people are informed of political decisions so that they may be more knowledgeable participants in the political process.

The Institute of Bill of Rights Law was established by a bequest of Laura Lee, who held a lifelong interest in a free press and its role in our society, in memory of her parents, Alfred Wilson Lee and Mary I. W. Lee.
