

2015

The Special Rights Fallacy: How Rights Enactments for Vulnerable Groups Can Actually Make Them Worse Off (Program)

James G. Dwyer

William & Mary Law School, jgdwye@wm.edu

Repository Citation

Dwyer, James G., "The Special Rights Fallacy: How Rights Enactments for Vulnerable Groups Can Actually Make Them Worse Off (Program)" (2015). St. George Tucker Lecture. Paper 11.
<http://scholarship.law.wm.edu/tucker/11>

WILLIAM & MARY
LAW SCHOOL

THE 2014-15
ST. GEORGE TUCKER
LECTURE

FEBRUARY 13TH, 2015
12:50 P.M.
NATIONAL CENTER FOR STATE COURTS

JAMES G. DWYER

Professor James G. Dwyer joined the William & Mary Law faculty in 2000 after teaching law at the Chicago-Kent College of Law and the University of Wyoming College of Law.

Prior to teaching, he practiced law with Sutherland, Asbill, and Brennan; and Coudert Brothers; both in Washington, D.C., and worked in New York State Family Court as a Law Guardian and Assigned Counsel.

Professor Dwyer teaches family law, youth law, and law and social justice. He was selected for the Class of 2010 Professorship, and he has twice been the recipient of the Plumeri Award.

He is the author of History and Philosophy of Homeschooling (University of Chicago Press, forthcoming 2015), Moral Status and Human Life: The Case for Children's Superiority (Cambridge University Press 2011), The Relationship Rights of Children (Cambridge University Press 2006), and numerous other books and articles.

The 2014-15 Tucker Lecture

“The Special Rights Fallacy:
How Rights Enactments for Vulnerable Groups Can Actually
Make Them Worse Off”

JAMES G. DWYER
ARTHUR B. HANSON
PROFESSOR OF LAW

THE ST. GEORGE TUCKER LECTURE SERIES

The St. George Tucker Lecture Series was established in 1996 to recognize annually the scholarly achievements of a senior member of the William & Mary Law School faculty.