Thomas Krattenmaker
newly appointed dean of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law
Dear Friends:

During the final stages of publication of this magazine, William and Mary’s Board of Visitors approved the appointment of Thomas Krattenmaker, professor of law at Georgetown University, as the Law School’s new dean. Everyone here in Williamsburg is looking ahead with great excitement to Tom’s arrival this summer.

Tom is a truly outstanding member of our profession. He has been on the law faculty at the Georgetown University Law Center for more than 20 years, and was associate dean for graduate studies from 1986 to 1989. A graduate of Swarthmore College and Columbia University School of Law, Tom clerked for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Harlan and has served with the Federal Trade Commission’s Bureau of Consumer Protection and the Federal Communication Commission’s Network Inquiry Staff.

Tom’s appointment to the deanship signals a new era for the Law School. He brings to our deanship a wonderful reputation as a teacher and a scholar, great enthusiasm and a real dedication to the Law School’s proud mission of educating citizen-lawyers.

Please join me in welcoming Dean Tom Krattenmaker and his family to the Marshall-Wythe community.

Paul Marcus
Acting Dean
MESSAGE FROM THE DEAN

Paul Marcus, Acting Dean of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law

In recent years this message has considered many important aspects of the law program at the College of William and Mary: the quality of the students being admitted, changes in our educational mission, developments in our curriculum, and the great support given to us by friends and graduates. Today I focus attention on our faculty. My colleagues are strong teachers, scholars and public servants. They are a diverse group coming from a rich variety of professional and educational experiences. I present to you a cross-section of the Marshall-Wythe law faculty.

Professor Peter A. Alces joined the Marshall-Wythe faculty in 1990. Prior to that time, he practiced law in Chicago with the firm of Sidley & Austin and taught at the University of Alabama School of Law. Professor Alces' teaching and research interests are in the commercial law and bankruptcy areas. He has published six books, and currently is under contract writing three more. He also has published more than 20 articles in the last 10 years. He is a member of the American Law Institute and serves as an advisor to the Restatement (Third) of Suretyship. Professor Alces is the Association of American Law Schools liaison to the Uniform Commercial Code Article 9 Revision Committee. He also chaired the American Bar Association's U.C.C. Article 9 Filing System Task Force.

Professor Alces is a frequent speaker at professional meetings and continuing legal education presentations throughout the country. He is the editor-in-chief of the Journal of Bankruptcy Law and Practice, a scholarly periodical published six times a year by the Warren, Gorham, Lamont Publishing Co. At Marshall-Wythe, he has served on the Faculty Appointments Committee and this year is chair of the committee. He also has assumed other significant Law School and College governance responsibilities.

Professor Lynda Butler joined the faculty in 1979 after practicing law in Washington, D.C., with the firm of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering. She received her J.D. from the University of Virginia and her B.S. from the College of William and Mary. At Marshall-Wythe, Professor Butler has taught principally in the property law area and, in recent years, has focused most of her scholarship on land use and environmental policy issues. Her publications include, among others, articles in the William and Mary Law Review, the University of Illinois Law Review and the Brigham Young University Law Review, as well as a treatise on Virginia Tidal and Coastal Law. Recent activities include development of an environmental law and policy course for non-law students and research on the role of politics in environmental policy-making.

In addition to her teaching and research interests, Professor Butler is active in university governance matters and in bar-related activities. Besides serving on the Board of Governors of the Real Property Section of the Virginia State Bar, she is editor of The Fee Simple, the section's biannual newsletter. Additionally, she is vice-president and the first woman to be appointed president-elect of the Faculty Assembly of the College and is chairing the College's Self-Study Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics. "Although these activities are time-consuming, I appreciate the opportunity to work with faculty from other schools, and I enjoy being able to remain in contact with former students," Professor Butler says.

Professor John Donaldson joined the faculty in 1966 after a brief period of private practice and several years of work in the Office of the Chief Counsel of the I.R.S. He earned his law degree at Marshall-Wythe and received an LL.M. degree from Georgetown. In his tenure at the College he has served tours of duty as associate dean, assistant vice-president for academic affairs and counsel to the Endowment Association. Over the years his teaching assignments have embraced more than 20 courses, including negotiable instruments, contracts, Virginia procedure, land use, property and most of the tax offerings. He currently teaches courses in basic income taxation, trusts and estates, transfer taxation and estate planning.

Professor Donaldson has been active in the Virginia Bar and Bar Association, having served on the Executive Committee and chaired sections and committees on eminent domain, taxation, and wills, trusts and estates. He currently serves as vice-chairman of the Virginia Mandatory Continuing Legal Education Board and is a member of the bar’s Ad Hoc Committee on Lawyers Serving As Fiduciaries. He has served as a consultant to the Office of the Virginia Attorney General on issues involving state taxation and enforcement of charitable bequests.

A frequent lecturer at tax conferences and institutes, Professor Donaldson enjoys the interaction with the profession that accompanies his extensive participation in continuing legal education offerings. His current research efforts focus on elder law topics and needed changes in Virginia legislation affecting trusts and decedents. He notes that “my greatest professional satisfaction derives from the continuing stimulation and challenge of teaching and my relationship with current and former students.”

Professor Davison Douglas joined the faculty in 1990 after practicing law in Raleigh, N.C., where he specialized in labor and employment law and civil rights law. He is a graduate of Princeton University and Yale Law School where he was a note editor of the Yale Law Journal. Professor Douglas also received a Ph.D. in history from Yale and a master’s degree from Yale Divinity School. At Marshall-Wythe, he specializes in teaching torts, intellectual property, and law and economics; in past years he has taught primarily in the areas of labor and employment law and American legal history. “Employment law—a course that few law schools even offered as recently as five years ago—is one of the most rapidly changing areas of American jurisprudence,” Professor Douglas notes. “As both Congress and state legislators increasingly regulate the employment relationship, this area of the law will only grow in significance.”

Professor Douglas has recently written a book on the desegregation of the Charlotte, N.C., schools and edited a two-volume collection of materials on school busing. He is currently at work on an article that deals with the concept of good faith in employment contracts. In 1993 he was selected by the student body as “Professor of the Year.”

Professor Walter Felton occupies a unique faculty position. The position was created in 1982 through cooperation between the College of William and Mary and the Commonwealth’s Attorneys Association, combining teaching responsibilities in the Law School with the mission of providing continuing legal education, research and technical advice to the 121 elected commonwealth’s attorneys and their some 300 appointed assistant prosecutors in Virginia.

In addition to his Law School duties, Professor Felton oversees the publication of the Commonwealth Attorneys Handbook and other technical manuals for Virginia’s prosecutors. He monitors all criminal justice legislation introduced in each session of the General Assembly of Virginia, regularly testifying before legislative committees considering the merits of the legislation.

Professor Felton also serves on the Executive Committee of the Anson-Hoffman American Inn of Court. He was recently appointed by Chief Justice Carrico of the Virginia Supreme Court to the Statewide Coordinating Council for Domestic Violence. Additionally, he serves as counsel to numerous executive and legislative commissions and task forces related to criminal law and procedure such as the Governor’s Commission on Violent Crime and the Sentencing and Parole Reform Commission. At the Law School commencement ceremony in May 1993, Professor Felton was presented with the John Marshall Award for “outstanding service to the Law School community and for the fidelity to those qualities of character, leadership and selfless service...” embodied by John Marshall.

Beginning in January 1994, Professor Felton has taken a leave of absence from the law school to serve as deputy attorney general in the administration of newly elected Attorney General James S. Gilmore.

Professor Felton received his B.A. and J.D. degrees from the University of Richmond. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Omicron Delta Kappa. He was articles editor of the University of Richmond Law Review and chancellor of the McNeil Law Society. He served in the U.S. Army Judge Advocate Corps from 1969 to 1973 and engaged in the private practice of law in Suffolk, Va., from 1973 to 1982.

Professor Trotter Hardy joined the Marshall-Wythe faculty in 1982, following graduation from Duke University, where he was an editor of the Duke Law Journal, and a clerkship with the Honorable John D. Butzner on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. At Marshall-Wythe, he specializes in teaching torts, intellectual property, and law and economics; in past years he has also taught courses in legal research and writing, law and medicine, and law and computers.

Professor Hardy maintains an active discussion with colleagues around the world over the Internet computer network, serving as moderator of “Cyberia,” an ongoing discussion of the law and policy of computer networks. As part of his interest in expanding the uses of computer technology such as electronic mail and networks, he organized and moderated a conference last year on the effects of electronic mail on law teaching and law practice. Unlike other legal conferences, Professor Hardy’s conference was itself conducted entirely by electronic mail! None of the 20 participants ever left the office, or even met face to face.

“The electronic conference was a bit of an experiment,” he notes. “I think it was the first time anyone had tried it Again, both professors and practitioners with the format, and all thought that the level of the discussion was quite high." Professor Hardy recently published an article on the conference in the Harvard Journal of Law & Technology and will be publishing an edited transcript of the conference.

By the time this magazine reaches print, Professor Hardy will have completed a second electronic conference, this one addressing the question of whether the world of computer networks ("cyberspace," as it is sometimes known) might be treated for some purposes as a separate legal jurisdiction. Again, both professors and practitioners are involved, this time from England and Australia as well as the United States.

Professor Linda A. Malone is the Marshall-Wythe Foundation Professor of Law and director of the graduate program in the American legal system. Professor Malone received her B.A. from Vassar and her J.D. from Duke, where she was research and managing editor of the Duke Law Journal. Prior to joining the William and Mary faculty in 1988, she served as a law clerk for the Honorable Wilbur F. Pell, United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, and practiced law in Chicago and Atlanta. She has taught at Arkansas and has been a visiting professor at Duke, Arizona and Denver.

Professor Malone’s special areas of research are environmental regulation of land use, international environmental law and human rights. She is the author of a number of publications in those areas, including a treatise, Environmental Regulation of Land Use, a casebook, Environmental Law, and most recently, articles in the Stanford Environmental Law Review, UCLA Journal of Environmental Law and the Colorado Law Review.

Professor Malone is the associate editor of the Yearbook of International Law, a member of the Board of Visitors of Duke Law School, chair of the Agricultural Law Section of the Association of American Law Schools and a member of the Advisory Board of the National Enforcement Training Institute of the Environmental Protection Agency. She was a delegate to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development (the Rio Earth Summit) in Brazil in 1992 and co-counsel for Bosnia before the World Court in its lawsuit against former Yugoslavia alleging state complicity in genocide. "In the future I hope to focus on the interrelationship of international environmental law with human rights and also consider women’s issues on campus," Professor Malone says.

Professor Alemante Selassie joined the faculty in 1987 after practicing law in Milwaukee with the firm of Foley and Landner, where he was an associate on the commercial finance team. He is a 1972 graduate of the University of Virginia School of Law and currently teaches civil procedure, criminal procedure and criminal trial advocacy. Prior to joining the faculty in 1988, she served as an assistant attorney general for the Commonwealth of Virginia. Professor Spencer had also served as a senior appellate attorney with the U.S. Justice Department’s Civil Rights Division and as an assistant U.S. attorney in the District of Columbia.

As a government litigator, Professor Spencer briefed and argued cases in every federal circuit court of appeal in the country and briefed numerous United States Supreme Court cases. She notes that she has spent a "21-year tenure" working with "the persons who have the most significant impact on legal education and the judicial system in this country—judges and future lawyers."

Professor Spencer was recently appointed by Chief Justice Carrico of the Virginia Supreme Court to the Virginia State Bar’s Professionalism Faculty. Faculty members serve as instructors in the state bar’s mandatory ethics course. Additionally, Professor Spencer was appointed by the governor of Virginia to the State Board of Corrections and to the Virginia Commission on Parole and Sentencing Reform.

She was also recently awarded the Virginia Women Attorneys Foundation Distinguished Faculty Award for 1994.

Consistent with her interest in the criminal justice system, Professor Spencer published an article on the prosecution of drug-addicted mothers in the Connecticut Law Review, and is currently working on an article on the legal implications of incarceration as a means of crime control.

At the Law School commencement ceremony in May 1993, Professor Felton was presented with the John Marshall Award for "outstanding service to the Law School community and for the fidelity to those qualities of character, leadership and selfless service..." embodied by John Marshall.
Over the last 15 months, an Ad Hoc Committee to Review the Curriculum, made up of five faculty members and two students, has been thinking hard and, we hope, wisely about what Marshall-Wythe’s curriculum should look like in the coming decade. Not surprisingly, there are many opinions to consider.

Some lawyers believe—and, of course, they may be right—that the best curriculum is the one under which they studied law 10 or 20 years ago. Other observers believe that radical changes are in order—that the traditional law school curriculum encourages uneven distribution of justice and simply reinforces the status quo. In between are those—and I think most legal academics fall into this category—who believe the traditional law school curriculum is still sound in principle, but that some modifications may be necessary to reflect recent changes in the nature of legal practice.

Some of our peer schools have provided models for our discussions. In studying these schools’ recent curricular reforms, we often see an increased emphasis on interdisciplinary studies, the introduction of statutory and regulatory materials into the first-year course package and various experimental programs testing the application of learning theories to legal education. The menu of options is almost endless.

Though our Committee is still meeting weekly to work out both the form and content of its ultimate recommendations, it is fair to say that Marshall-Wythe’s curriculum is not heading for any kind of dramatic overhaul. Indeed, one of the most remarkable curricular initiatives in the country occurred not long ago right here—when Marshall-Wythe initiated the Legal Skills Program in 1988.

Nevertheless, we are once again asking ourselves what knowledge, skills and experiences will be essential for a lawyer entering practice at the end of this century. We are asking ourselves—as many other law schools are doing—whether we need to add some additional features to the curriculum to reflect the internationalized nature of many lawyers’ practices today. We are looking at the way lawyers work in these times—using new technologies, delegating many tasks to paralegals and resolving an increasing number of contested matters without resort to the traditional judicial system.

We are focusing—and this is critical—on the challenges of teaching writing and effective oral communication. We are revisiting the question of what it means, if anything, to say we are training “citizen lawyers.” Dozens of considerations—including faculty capabilities and preferences, availability of adjunct faculty and even such mundane issues as classroom space—must go into a serious evaluation of a law school curriculum.

In considering what the best solutions may be for Marshall-Wythe students, we decided last spring to ask some very enthusiastic experts—Marshall-Wythe alumni. During the summer of 1993, we surveyed approximately 600 recent graduates, representing the graduating classes of 1983 through 1992. More than 400 alumni responded, which is a wonderful tribute to their continuing interest in excellence at the law school. We are grateful for their cooperation in this survey, and especially so for the insights their answers brought to us.

What did we learn? First, some demographics (Graph 1 and 2):

We then asked about the practice areas in which our graduates are currently spending their professional time; we also asked about pro bono work (Graph 3 and 4):

We sought your advice on such matters as how to structure the major writing requirement, whether we should incorporate writing into some of the upper level substantive courses, whether we should require a writing experience in which students and faculty collaborate one-on-one, and whether we should work to achieve smaller classes in the first year. We asked about the value of "live-client" experiences and the plusses and minuses of early specialization and mandatory pro bono work. We got answers to all these questions and much, much more.

Many of you added thoughtful comments and suggestions for improvement—largely focusing on the practical side of legal practice. Others urged us not to change too much. You offered recollections of classes that worked for you and some that didn't. You pinpointed the strengths you see in the Marshall-Wythe graduates you have hired in recent years. We read it all. And read it again. We shared your comments with our colleagues on the faculty. The body of information and suggestions you shared with the Committee are informing our deliberations at every step.
The Man Behind the

"WYTHE"

George Wythe, the lesser known of the Law School’s namesakes, was a visionary legal educator.

by Professor Davison M. Douglas

Marshall-Wythe School of Law.
By the end of the first week of classes, every law student here knows all about John Marshall (along with William Marbury and James Madison). But few law students, even by the end of the last class of the third year of law school, know much, if anything, about George Wythe. Indeed, an informal survey of Marshall-Wythe students taken during the spring of 1993 indicated that less than a quarter could identify Wythe as William and Mary’s first law professor.

Yet Wythe was far more than William and Mary’s—and America’s—first professor of law. While at William and Mary, Wythe instituted an expansive and creative system of legal education that has remarkably contemporary applications.

Just as many current legal educators espouse the importance of providing law students with training in collateral fields such as economics and history, Wythe insisted that his students read literature, moral philosophy and history along with their study of legal doctrine. Moreover, Wythe viewed one of his primary roles as legal educator to train his students to engage in a life of public service. Although that vision is shared by many contemporary law professors, few modern educators can boast of having taught two presidents of the United States (Thomas Jefferson and James Madison), one chief justice of the Supreme Court (John Marshall) and several United States senators (including Henry Clay). Finally, Wythe appreciated the need to provide law students with rigorous practical training in the advocacy skills of the lawyer, reinstating the medieval tradition of the moot court and initiating his own innovation of the mock legislature. William and Mary’s current legal-skills training program, which has served as a model for many other law schools, has a distinguished 18th-century predecessor.

The aspiring lawyer in colonial America had few options to learn the law: either travel to London to study at the Inns of Court or apprentice with a local lawyer in the colonies. London was the preferred method, but was expensive, and so most lawyers—including Wythe—learned the law by means of an apprenticeship. Yet the apprenticeship method of learning the law left much to be desired; many apprentices did little more than spend their days transcribing documents by hand in an era that knew nothing of the copying machine.

Wythe joined the Virginia bar in 1746, practiced law in Williamsburg and eventually won a seat in the Virginia House of Burgesses. In 1762, Wythe took on his first apprentice, a young man who had just finished his formal studies at the College of William and Mary and who appeared to show particular promise. For the next five years, Thomas Jefferson studied under the direction of Wythe.

Dissatisfied with his own apprenticeship experience, Wythe developed for Jefferson an extremely broad curriculum: ethics, moral philosophy, biblical studies, government, history, art, literature, along with the leading legal treatises, primarily Edward Coke’s Commentaries on Littleton. Coke’s treatise was an extremely difficult read, prompting Jefferson to comment: “I so wish the devil had old Coke, for I am sure I never was so tired of an old dull scoundrel in my life.” Eventually, the standard legal text for aspiring American lawyers would be Blackstone’s Commentaries, but it was not published in this country until 1771.

In 1779, Jefferson became Governor of Virginia and a member of the Board of Visitors of the College of William and Mary. Jefferson directed the creation of a professorship of “Law and Police,” something akin to what currently might be characterized as law and policy.

In establishing this professorship, Jefferson aspired to implement his vision of legal education. Drawing in large measure on his own experience with Wythe, Jefferson was convinced that lawyers needed far more than training in forms of pleading and substantive legal doctrines. Rather, in Jefferson’s view, lawyers should receive a broad education through which they would be instilled with “public virtue”—the desire to pursue the public good rather than private gain.

One of the most popular books in America during the 1770s—and a favorite of Jefferson’s—was Montesquieu’s The Spirit of Laws. Montesquieu believed that a republican form of government could be maintained only if a significant group of persons emerged who practiced public virtue. Although Montesquieu thought that the family would function as the primary social institution for inculcating public virtue, Jefferson believed that the university was best suited to perform this role. Whereas universities had traditionally engaged primarily in the training of clergy, Jefferson’s goal was to train a secular clergy of political leaders. Thus, using monies that had originally been designated for a chair in theology, Jefferson established the professorship of Law and Police.

To carry out his vision of education, Jefferson turned to his mentor, George Wythe. In 1779, Wythe became the first law professor in the colonies, and would remain in that post until 1790.

About half of William and Mary’s 80 students quickly chose to pursue a course of study with Wythe. There were several components to Wythe’s educational program. First, Wythe lectured his students on basic English common law doctrines, relying in significant measure on Blackstone. Although Wythe’s lecture materials have been lost, the classroom notes of several of his students have been preserved—including those of John Marshall. Marshall’s classroom notes suggest that...
George Wythe (1726-1806), whose name graces the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, developed many innovations in legal education still practiced today, including the training of students in advocacy skills. One of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, Wythe also offered the resolution for ratification of the U.S. Constitution at the Virginia constitutional convention in 1788.

About the Author:

Davison M. Douglas is an associate professor of law at Marshall-Wythe School of Law. He teaches in the areas of labor and employment law and American legal history.

Professor Douglas was greatly assisted in the preparation of this essay by Dee Cohen, a member of the Class of 1993 at Marshall-Wythe.
I want to speak to you today about the choices that you will have to make in the very near future.

Wherever you turn today, you hear that the American people have grown hard and cynical—that there has been widespread disenchantment with our institutions, with our elected representatives and with an American dream that refuses to come true. And, as part of that disenchantment, we may have lost touch with a notion that is quintessentially American: the idea that one person alone can make a difference, that one man or woman who is committed to a goal can make changes that will have an effect on the entire body politic.

My concern is to recover that notion and to see it work again. It may sound trite to you, it may sound like standard lines from a standard speech. But I firmly believe that its triteness does not deny its truth. There will always be people who are content with the way things are. No matter who they are—good or bad, worthy or not—these people will be content with the status quo.

But there will always be others who want to make a difference, and it is to you that I speak today. I want to tell you that the times are ready for you, and for your ideas. For you are fortunate to be coming into your own during a time of ferment, when the committed man and woman can make a distinct contribution to the welfare of the nation.

The moral balance of the nation for years to come will depend on how well you make those choices. Aristotle said that man is by nature a social animal whose desire is to live in the company of others, and we know how true this is from our own experiences. We go to schools, we marry, have families, join churches and clubs together in discreet bundles that are stabilized, for the most part, only by a morality of our own making.

This morality, this moral glue that binds us together, comes from several sources. It comes from within us, it comes from family teaching, it comes from our religious institutions and our centers of learning, and to a great degree it comes from the governments that we choose to conduct our affairs.

The morality that the best of governments has to offer is what defines us as a nation, what makes us different, for better or for worse, from our neighbors.
on this planet. In the United States, the ultimate force of government is not coercion, or the fear of penalty, but the moral persuasion that good government produces. Take away that moral persuasion, that binding glue, and all that is left are the bare bones of the law.

And the law is never enough. As a lawyer as well as a doctor, I can assure you of that. For underlying the bare bones of the law must be those personal standards that we bring to our work, to our lives and to our social obligations. Without those standards, the law is not enough.

Even within the confines of a statute, a regulation, the Canon of Ethics, there are choices to be made, choices that will shape the lives of people and your own life as well. And those choices must be made.

You cannot use a smokescreen. You cannot go through life being captain of the debating team. You cannot always hide behind the notion of client loyalty. You have to come down on one side or the other and mean it.

The law must be dispassionate, but lawyers dare not be.

We think of ourselves, without hesitation, as honorable men and women, people with standards that are an unshakable part of the way that we deal with the world. We think of ourselves as moral beings, with a distinct knowledge of what is right and what is wrong. Because we know this about ourselves—know it with complete confidence—we rarely, if ever, find the need to turn inward and to question it.

But the need to understand our own values is still there. Not the abstract values. We know all about them. After all, classic good and evil are obvious, even in disguises. I'm speaking about practical, everyday values—questions that I have to ask myself, and to answer, before I can say that I own my conscience. What would I do in a given situation? Where would I draw the line? When would I say, "This far and no further"?

These are questions that have to be answered in order to establish a yardstick of values, and they ought to be answered as early as possible in life. Because you don't begin to own yourself until you have established that yardstick, and, once established, those values will stay with you always. No matter where you go or what you do—whether it is in the private sector, in government, in the academy—those values, those beliefs will always be there to serve you.

That doesn't mean that one's values cannot change. Only a fool resists rational change. But, once established, those basic values will never desert you.

Most of what we do every day is routine, even those of us who appear to live on the cutting edge of action. The astronaut, the brain surgeon, the litigator, spend the greater portion of their time in routine work that calls for no ethical awareness, no moral decisions to be made. But then there is that one time in fifty, a hundred, or a thousand, when an issue arises that demands an immediate judgement, where the fate of one person or even a nation may hang in the balance. If your standards have been set, you will be morally prepared to face the issue with confidence—confidence, but not arrogance, for it is one thing to be right, and quite another to be righteous.

Your future, and the future of others, will depend on how you meet those occasions and face those issues. Once established, those values will enable you to withstand the pressures that will try to bend you from your goals, because those of you who want to accomplish something, who want to make a difference, will always be subject to that sort of pressure.

I know something about that pressure from personal experience.

"Jefferson said that when a man assumes a public trust, he should consider himself as public property. And for those of us in public service, there is no higher ideal."
I challenge you to strive for an ethical perfection that can never be attained, but which always must be sought.
mizes public service. But it must be the type of public service that articulates what we stand for and where we are going.

It must be the type of public service that seeks responsibility, not power—that seeks trust, not authority—that seeks integrity, not rank or privilege. It must be the type of public service that equates its mission with public interest, not special interests.

It must be the type of public service that enlists people of judgment—those who are willing to take risks, who are willing to admit past mistakes and are willing to correct them. It must be the type of public service that enlists people who truly believe that they can make a difference.

It must be the type of public service that the American people can trust, for Americans have always regarded their government with a mixture of reliance and mistrust. It could almost be called the American way.

When pollsters ask Americans large and generalized questions—"Do you think that government is too involved in your life?" "Do you think that government should stop regulating business?"—a majority of the people will always vote to get the government off our backs. But when specific questions are asked—"Are you in favor of Social Security?" "How do you feel about funding research for pediatric AIDS?" "What about the safety of your food and drugs?"—the same majority will vote for government intervention.

In fact, Americans do not want less government. What they want is a government that can solve problems, that is more efficient and more capable of innovation. What they want is a government of public servants who truly believe that one man or woman can make a difference, that one dedicated person with a goal can make the changes that will shake the world.

What they want is nothing less than the practical morality that we all have the right to expect in our dealings with one another—both inside the government and out.

I challenge you to strive for an ethical perfection that can never be attained, but which always must be sought.

I challenge you to join a world in which cynicism is the enemy to fear, and your finest friends are the values that you cherish.

It is an uncertain world, in the particular way that the law can be uncertain. It is a world of verities, but no sureties, of guidelines, but no guarantees, of pounding pressure and infinite horizons.

If this is going to be your world, then I welcome you to it, and I wish you well. I wish you the strength to survive your losses, and the wisdom to keep your triumphs in perspective.

I wish you mornings of great promise, afternoons of toil, evenings of pleasant weariness and nights filled with the sleep that comes to those who have done their best.

I wish you the future, and when the time comes to sum up that future, I hope that you will be able to say: I occupied some space on earth, and I did some good. I made a difference.
“CONFRONTING

The 40-year legacy of Brown v. Board of Education
Institute of Bill of Rights Law and Howard University
Lynda Gunn, the only black student at the Stockbridge elementary school, was a natural choice for this picture that accompanied a Look article assessing school integration a decade after the Brown v. Board of Education ruling. Now 37 and an assistant manager at a bank, Gunn herself had never known segregation: "It was a small town and everyone knew everyone." The nine-year-old walked to Rockwell’s studio every day after school for a week and posed alone. The guards came later. "He used two pieces of wood to position my feet and showed me how to stand. It was hard for me to be still, but he worked around that." When the picture was finished, Gunn was pleased with all but one aspect. "I didn’t wear my hair that way. He got that hairstyle himself—I don’t know from where."

On May 17, 1954, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down decades of "separate but equal" racial segregation in public schools in the landmark decision Brown v. Board of Education. The court’s opinion stated in part:

Today, education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities, even service in the armed forces. It is the very foundation of good citizenship. Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values, in preparing him for later professional training, and in helping him to adjust normally to his environment. In these days, it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms.

The Brown decision was the culmination of a 20-year effort on the part of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) using the courts to attack segregated education. But despite the ruling in Brown, it would be several years before black children in much of the country, particularly in the deep South, would attend integrated schools—largely because of the staunch resistance of white political leaders. Indeed, on the 10th anniversary of the Brown decision, only about 1 percent of black children in the 11 states of the former Confederacy were attending integrated schools. Nevertheless, Brown marked the first substantial attack on the longstanding practice of separating the races in American public life and marked the beginning of the end of racial separation in this country's schools and other public institutions.

On May 17-18, 1994, the Institute of Bill of Rights Law at the College of William and Mary and Howard University Law School will hold a national conference, Brown v. Board of Education After 40 Years—"Confronting the Promise," to commemorate the remarkable legacy of the Brown decision.

Scheduled to take place on the William and Mary campus, the conference will focus in part on the dramatic history of the decision, including participation by some of the individuals involved in the event itself. It also will provide a forum for discussion of issues that gave rise to the Brown decision and that still confront the nation involving public education, civil rights and racism.

The conference will include large plenary sessions and many smaller seminars and workshops. For the plenary sessions, a wide variety of program formats will be used, with an emphasis on those that foster a high degree of spontaneity, interaction, debate and discussion among participants. Examples include town meetings, moot courts and panel discussions moderated by experienced national journalists.

The conference sponsors have convened a National Steering Committee to oversee planning. The executive chair of the committee is Judge Damon Keith of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, a distinguished federal judge and a champion of civil rights. Joining Judge Keith as co-chairs are Virginia's former governor, L. Douglas Wilder, and Henry Ramsey, Jr., the dean of Howard University Law School. Most members of the committee, which includes individuals who were instrumental in bringing the Brown case to the Supreme Court, will participate in the conference as speakers, moderators, panelists and seminar leaders.

The "live audience" for the conference will include national policy-makers and scholars, as well as approximately 400 high school students, teachers and administrators drawn from a diverse group of high school districts in the Williamsburg and surrounding areas. In addition, conference organizers are exploring the possibility of a live broadcast of some or all of the conference proceedings to schools and to the public throughout the nation.
A group of 30 student volunteers from Marshall-Wythe and other programs at the College have become involved in an international effort to prosecute human rights abuses and atrocities committed in the former Yugoslav federation. The project was brought to Marshall-Wythe by Professor Linda Malone, who is serving as co-counsel before the World Court on behalf of Bosnia in its lawsuit alleging complicity in genocide against the former Yugoslavia. Malone is supervising the project, which is student-run and headed by Martha Dye, 3L.

The purpose of the project is to assist in the preparation of a memorandum of law for use by a special committee, which was established by the U.N. Security Council to investigate and compile documentation on the commission of war crimes in Bosnia for the U.N. Bosnian War Crimes Tribunal. The giant (211-page) memorandum was initially drafted by law professor M. Cherif Bassiouni of Chicago's DePaul University. Bassiouni was originally nominated by U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to be the prosecutor for the tribunal.

The memorandum is the product of a special U.N.-sponsored Commission of Experts. Professor Bassiouni led the team of investigators in a nearly year-long effort to gather testimony and information in the former Yugoslavia. As head of the commission and Special Rapporteur to the U.N., Bassiouni will present the memorandum to the international tribunal and will assist in the prosecutorial effort.

The first stage of the student effort focused on conducting a thorough editing of the memorandum. Then, after consultation with DePaul University, the students engaged in extensive revisions of the areas requiring amplification and clarification on points of fact and law. Although the project is largely a law school undertaking, graduate students from the College's Thomas Jefferson Program in Public Policy and undergraduate students also have become involved.
As U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg recently stated, real change is effected through constant dialogue and constant persuasion. Constant dialogue and persuasion, though welcome and necessary, can be difficult. Especially when, as is often the case with gender, the topic is closely linked to our personal identities.

The first time my mother told me to sit like a lady (while my brother sat sprawled) I was totally confused. After all, sitting sprawled was pretty darned comfortable. It is difficult as a child to understand why, and even to what extent, your interests and goals conflict with what social tradition tells you they ought to be. As adults, though, this conflict becomes more distinct and the questions more apparent.

What, for instance, is my, your or our role in society? How free are we or should we be in defining those roles and hence who we are? Do the laws treat us differently? Should they treat us differently?

The law does, in a way, answer many of these questions. But the law requires interpretation, enforcement and composition. It is not devoid of human preference or prejudice, nor can it be. And so one of the things we as lawyers must do is debate, through constant dialogue and persuasion, the legitimacy, effectiveness and impact of our laws.

It is in this spirit that Marshall-Wythe recently added to its list of prestigious academic reviews the William and Mary Journal of Women and the Law. Approved by the faculty in September 1993, the Journal is a serious legal review of national scope that focuses solely on issues concerning women and the law. As a facilitator of scholarly debate, the Journal will not promote a fixed ideology but will instead be a forum for open discussion and varying viewpoints. Although tailored to gender-related legal issues, the topics covered will be numerous and varied: criminal law, employment law, reproductive rights, contract law, constitutional law, tort law, education, biases in the judicial process and much more.

The staff is working diligently toward publishing the Journal’s first annual issue in the fall of 1994. Each issue will include three sections: professional articles, student articles and a commentator’s section to assess groundbreaking cases and statutes.

The Journal will influence the legal community both internally and externally. Internally, the Journal will furnish students with an opportunity to learn about a rapidly evolving area of law currently underrepresented in the Law School curriculum, and will also provide them an additional avenue to publish and gain journal experience. Externally, the Journal joins a small field of 11 other academic journals focusing exclusively on gender-related legal issues. Research on these journals indicates that published debate in this area of law has not yet kept up with demand.

Although the Journal cannot resolve all jurisprudential and societal conflicts, it will at the very least add to the dialogue and persuasion needed to effect real change.

Subscription rates are $10; $8 for alumni and students. Checks are payable to: The Journal of Women and the Law, Marshall-Wythe School of Law, Williamsburg, Virginia 23187.

It is time to critically appraise international banking law in the wake of the world’s greatest financial fraud. The Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI) case resulted in a Congressional and regulatory overreaction in the form of the Foreign Bank Supervision Enhancement Act of 1991 (Act) and revisions to Federal Reserve Regulation K (Reg K). These laws will affect all foreign banks that seek to do business in the United States for years to come. They are far-reaching, governing all aspects of foreign bank operations in the United States, including entry requirements, deposit insurance, termination, examination, information sharing, reporting and penalties. Many lawyers are very concerned about the effect of these new laws on foreign bank entry into and participation in U.S. banking markets, yet the subject has received little scholarly attention. I am currently undertaking this research task.

In part, my fascination with foreign banks and international finance is born out of a desire to know “how the world works.” How does big money move across borders? What do international banks do and why do they do it? How are they regulated? As an attorney with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York from 1989 to 1993, I was significantly involved in and responsible for the investigation and prosecution of BCCI and related entities and individuals (including BCCI's American lawyers, Clark M. Clifford and Robert A. Altman)—confronting the breakdown in international bank regulation. BCCI had controlled one of America’s most prestigious banking networks, First American, for more than a decade. It was an illegal bank holding company under federal banking law.

I arrived in Abu Dhabi, the operational head of BCCI in its later years, and drove through the desert in a bulletproof van in the middle of night in March 1991—a few weeks after the Gulf War—to investigate BCCI. The fact that it was Ramadan was irrelevant. The Fed was angry. It sensed that it had been lied to about the true ownership structure of the First American banks. I was angry — and morally outraged. How could Clifford and Altman lie to the Fed? It was time to catch the bad bankers and their lawyers. Little did I know that by midsummer of 1991 the investigation would kill the world’s seventh largest private bank, the 200th largest bank overall.

For more than a week I went through box after box of documents. Stunning reading. Evidence that nominees were used to control First American. Payoffs from BCCI to American politicians and United Nations and World Bank officials. Shipments of weapons to hostile countries, financed by BCCI. Huge deposits of cash into the 22 branches of BCCI in Medellin, Colombia.

I knew I was seeing only part of the story. Surely, I thought, the Abu Dhabi government was screening the documents to ensure that any evidence of culpability on their part was not turned over to me. That government—because of its ownership stake and controlling influence over BCCI—could be the ultimate owner of First American. But I was told by the U.S. Ambassador that the government was friendly to the U.S. and had helped out in the Gulf War. Translation: Don’t make trouble for Sheikh Zayed.

The drama did not end in Abu Dhabi. After receiving a tip from an informant, I had the “pleasure” of causing the arrest of a gentleman from Pakistan who, I thought, had relevant information about BCCI links to First American. I escorted him to New York from his arrest location on the plane in handcuffs. They didn’t teach me how to do this in law school, but I had the help of some big fellows from the Manhattan District Attorney’s office. The thrills continued in Miami, where BCCI kept a warehouse of potentially incriminating documents. I was looking for roughly 10 pages among thousands—the minutes of the “America’s Coordinating Committee.” This was a secret group of BCCI and First American officials who met periodically to discuss the management of First American. It took two weeks, during which I was asked if I wanted protection from physical threats.

Why should the Fed care about who owns its banks? First, it is a crime to lie to the Federal government. Second, if the bank has problems, then the Fed may have to go to the bank’s owners and ask them to contribute capital and take corrective measures. The owners, in other words, have to be a “source of strength” to the bank. Third, banks are “special” because of their role in monetary policy and the payments system. Not everyone is fit and proper to own or manage a bank.

The world is familiar with the rest of the story. BCCI was closed on July 5, 1991 around the world and pleaded guilty to charges of secretly and illegally owning First American. It paid a $550 million fine. A Manhattan jury acquitted Altman of charges of conspiracy and lying to the government. Clifford, like his former client, Agha Hassan Abedi, the founder and president of BCCI, lives on in comfortable surroundings but fragile health. My wife—and Billy Joel—think that the evil live forever and only the good die young.

Now I am angry for a different reason. Congress and my former employer have overreacted to the BCCI affair. The Act and Reg K are bad laws resulting from a good case. First, they were protectionist in nature in that they are non-tariff barriers to free trade in banking services. Second, they represent unilateral action by the United States when, because of global banking, multilateral collective responses are needed. Third, they do not respond to the problems raised by the BCCI affair.

With respect to protectionism, it is now far more difficult for foreign banks to operate in the United States because of the Act and Reg K. This is inconsistent with the general trend in United States international economic policy in favor of free trade, as evidenced by the country’s active involvement in the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), the draft General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) and the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). In certain respects, the Act also is inconsistent with the national treatment policy that underlies the International Banking Act of 1978 (the significant pre-BCCI Federal statute on foreign bank operations in the United States).

The Act and Reg K were implemented without significant consultation of foreign bank regulatory authorities. This is unfortunate, because banks increasingly operate in many countries, either directly (by operating branches, agencies and subsidiaries in other countries) or indirectly (by maintaining correspondent banking relationships with banks in other countries). They can, therefore, transfer funds electronically, lend money, and trade foreign exchange on a 24-hour basis. Political boundaries are meaningless — these activities know no borders. Coordinated action by regulators in different countries, not unilateral action, is the best way to respond to global banking problems.

As to the point that the Act and Reg K do not respond to the problems raised by BCCI, it is critical to understand that none of the speculations raised by journalists regarding BCCI’s involvement in terrorism, narcotics trafficking and arms dealing has ever been substantiated, much less proven in a court. At root, the problem raised is lying to the government—BCCI lied to the Federal Reserve about its ownership and control of the First American banks. The Act and Reg K do not, and cannot, address this problem. Yet, ironically, the Act is sometimes called the “Never again BCCI” statute. Only greater coordination among a larger number of the world’s banking and law enforcement authorities can minimize the risks of a rerun.

Writing about a case in which I was so deeply involved for two years, and over which I still wake up at night, is therapeutic. There is an extra element of passion, which is crucial to successful writing. But it is also vexing. I know, regardless of what the Manhattan jury said, that Altman is guilty of concealing BCCI’s ownership interest in First American from the Fed. I know that Clifford is equally culpable, but his age has saved him from prosecution. I know that there are witnesses alive and well in Pakistan who can prove these points.

Rakesh ("Raj") Bhala is an assistant professor of law at Marshall-Wythe. He joined the faculty in the fall of 1993, after serving as an attorney at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, where he twice received the President’s Award for Excellence. Bhala also served as U.S. delegate to the U.N. Commission on International Trade Law.
The Making of a Modern-Day Courtroom

by Thomas J. DeLoughry

Williamsburg, VA—The Law School at the College of William and Mary last week unveiled a state-of-the-art moot courtroom that school officials say is unrivaled in higher education.

The courtroom at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law here is also more advanced than most functioning courtrooms in the United States, where videotape recorders are often considered high-tech.

The wood-paneled courtroom boasts two large television screens, a computerized transcription system, an automated videotaping system, and computers attached to the judge’s bench, the witness stand, and the desks of the court clerk, the prosecutor, the defense lawyer, and each of the eight jurors.

The computers can be used to connect to legal data bases, to review a transcript as it is being typed by a court
The equipment in the William and Mary courtroom was donated by corporate partners, including the Dell Computer Corporation and the Stenograph Corporation. Law school officials estimated that developing a similar courtroom elsewhere would cost between $25,000 and $100,000, depending on how much remodeling was required.

During a mock murder trial last week, William and Mary faculty members and students showed reporters and other guests how the technology in the new courtroom might be used. The transcript system, for example, enabled lawyers to interrogate a hearing-impaired witness, who read the questions from her computer screen before responding.

The two large television screens set in the wall behind the judge’s bench were used to show how people at remote locations—a defendant in a jail cell or a busy doctor at a local hospital—could appear on camera in the courtroom and participate in the proceedings. The screens also showed a videotape of a deposition when a witness’s testimony in the courtroom appeared to conflict with what she said when she was deposed.

Mr. Lederer, who played the part of the judge, used his computer to connect to Lexis, a legal data base, and was quickly able to review other cases and rule against a motion brought by the defense lawyer. The eight jurors, seated in a semicircle facing the judge, used their computers to view an animation of the assault and an illustration of the dead man’s brain that the doctor referred to in her testimony.

The automated videotaping system produced a tape of the proceedings that could be particularly valuable if a verdict was appealed. The taping system used five cameras concealed in dark, plastic bubbles on the ceiling that automatically focused on trial participants when they spoke into microphones in the courtroom.

The high-tech courtroom is a joint project of the law school and the National Center for State Courts, a Williamsburg-based professional association for state-court judges. The center, which operates a computer laboratory to show courtroom technology to visiting judges and court administrators, expects the William and Mary courtroom to become a national showcase for demonstrating how various technologies can be used together.

An Eye on Teaching

The law school, meanwhile, is still considering ways in which the high-tech courtroom can be used for teaching. “We will be adapting the technology to us, and us to the technology, over the next few years,” said Mr. Lederer, the law professor.

He said he expected that the heaviest use of the room would probably be in the school’s Legal Studies Program, which places students in simulated law firms for their first two years, during which they research and negotiate fictitious cases and sometimes try them in the courtroom.

Mr. Lederer said the courtroom would also be used as a computerized classroom to teach students how to use data-base services such as Lexis. The technology will also enable faculty members to use the room for multimedia lectures.

Among those interested in such opportunities is Trotter Hardy, a law professor who said he could envision using the courtroom to show students the written materials, computer programs, and musical recordings that he discusses in his classes on intellectual property. “Distance learning is also something that we are kind of looking at,” he said, noting the possibility of using the courtroom’s video system to deliver continuing education classes to lawyers at remote sites.

Jayne W. Barnard, associate dean of the law school, acknowledged that most law professors had moved more slowly toward technology than many of their colleagues in other disciplines. “I’ve discovered technology in other schools that hasn’t occurred to us over here,” she said.

But Ms. Barnard said she was optimistic that student interest in the technology, its growing popularity in the profession, and the enthusiasm of people like Mr. Lederer would lead more faculty members to get involved.

Mr. Marcus, the acting dean, agreed. “It’s going to take a little bit of time, but not too much time,” he said.

Marshall-Wythe celebrated another year of distinguished achievement in 1993. Several anniversaries were recognized: the 200th anniversary of the College’s granting the first Bachelor of Law degree in America; the 250th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson; and, of course, the 300th anniversary of William and Mary.

At the beginning of April, the Student Division of the Institute of Bill of Rights Law sponsored its fourth annual symposium, titled “Censorship and Music: Rock, Rap and the First Amendment.” The keynote speaker was Dave Marsh, former associate editor of Rolling Stone magazine and the author of numerous books about popular music. Above, distinguished television journalist Roger Mudd, the Law School’s 1993 Carter Lowance Fellow, moderates a panel in a heated discussion of free speech vs. community standards.

Every day, all year, reporters on the Supreme Court beat for the nation’s top newspapers vie for stories. On Sept. 17 and 18 those reporters met in Williamsburg with leading legal scholars for the sixth annual Supreme Court Preview, sponsored by the Institute of Bill of Rights Law. Discussion centered on key cases and timely issues before the court this term. Above, David Savage of the Los Angeles Times and Linda Greenhouse of The New York Times engage in discussion.

In recognition of his extraordinary work and talents, Robert E. Scott ’68, Dean of the University of Virginia Law School, received the honorary Order of the Coif award from Marshall-Wythe in 1993. Scott is pictured here in a photograph taken in 1969, when he was a visiting instructor at Marshall-Wythe.
On Nov. 11, the Institute of Bill of Rights Law sponsored a one-day conference, "The American Criminal Justice System: Approaching the Year 2000," which featured seven sessions on topics ranging from guidelines sentencing to federal environmental criminal law. Barbara Babcock, Ernest W. McFarland Professor of Law at Stanford, gave the luncheon address, "Taking the Stand."

On June 3, alumni and friends of the College gathered at Drapers' Hall in London for a Tercentenary celebration. Queen Elizabeth II, a member of the Drapers' Company by birth, greeted guests and heard the William and Mary Choir in concert. Several Drapers' Scholars were in attendance.

Lady Margaret Thatcher, former Prime Minister of Great Britain, was appointed the College's 21st Chancellor in 1993, succeeding former U.S. Chief Justice Warren Burger. Thatcher attended the Tercentenary celebration at the Drapers' Company and charmed guests with impromptu remarks.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was greeted with a 23-second ovation when he appeared at the College's Charter Day Convocation on Feb. 13. Prince Charles gave an impressive address that called on our modern, technological society to value "what is traditional and timeless."

This year Professor Alces is chair of the Faculty Appointments Committee at Marshall-Wythe and is serving as the faculty’s representative to the Association of American Law Schools annual meeting of delegates. He spoke before the Uniform Commercial Code Institute in October about reform of the U.C.C. Article 9 filing system.

Professor Rakesh Bhala is teaching International Business Transactions, International Financial Law and Public International Law. His book, Wire Transfers (1993), is selling in Japan, Nigeria, Singapore and other foreign countries as well as the United States. He has completed two chapters on the law of electronic funds transfers, one for a book by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the other for a book by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD).

Professor Bhala’s article on the importance of wire transfers to international financial markets appears as the lead article in the Winter 1993 Kentucky Law Journal. His article on microeconomic and banking aspects of specific wire transfer laws will appear in the Kansas Law Journal in March 1994.

Professor Bhala is currently working on a book on the Bank of Credit and Commercial International (BCCI) case, based in part on his personal experiences investigating and prosecuting BCCI, and on a law review article on the harmonization of international contract law.

He currently serves on the editorial board of The Financier, an interdisciplinary international finance journal. He visited China in November to study the development of securities markets and regulation.

Professor Lynda Butler continues to explore issues relating to land use regulation and the role of political and economic values in environmental policy-making. She is a co-author of a chapter in The Natural Environment, Law and Social Science, which is scheduled for publication in 1994. She also moderated a panel on environmental policymaking and has been working with other William and Mary faculty to improve environmental studies at the College.

During the past year Professor Butler has been very active in College and Law School governance matters. She was a member of the College’s Provost Search Committee and the Law School Dean Search Committee. She is chair of the College’s Self-Study Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics and is vice-president and will be the first woman president of the College’s Faculty Assembly.

Professor Butler continues to be active in the Virginia State Bar. She is editor of the Free Simple, a biannual publication on the Real Property Section of the Virginia State Bar, and serves as an ex officio member of the section’s Board of Governors. Last May she also participated in the section’s CLE program, presenting an update on the law of easements in Virginia.

Professor Neal Devins continues his work on constitutional politics. He served as special editor of and contributor to Elected Branch Interpretation of the Constitution, published by Law and Contemporary Problems. Professor Devins wrote a forward to this volume as well as an article entitled “Congress, the FCC, and the Search for the Public Trustee.” Along with 1992 grad Jarrel Wright and William and Mary government professor Larry Evans, Professor Devins published “Congressional Procedure and Statutory Interpretation” in the Administrative Law Review. Professor Devins also presented papers at symposiums sponsored by the Notre Dame Law Review on the 1991 Civil Rights Act and the Cardozo Law Review on executive branch interpretation of the law. Professor Devins gave workshops at the Emory Law School and the American Association of Law Schools Constitutional Law Conference on Solicitor General control of independent agency litigation. That paper will be published next year in the California Law Review.

Professor Devins’ professional activities included consulting projects for the ABA’s Central and East European Law Initiative and the U.S. Postal Service. For the ABA, Professor Devins worked with the governments of Czechoslovakia, Moldova, Russia and Lithuania. For the Postal Service, Professor Devins advised the service about over Justice Department objections. The UCLA Law Review will publish Professor Devins’ accounting of this dispute next year.

Professor John Donaldson is a contributing author for Advising the Elderly Client, published by Clark, Boardman and Callahan. His article “The Future of Transfer Taxation: Repeal, Restructuring and Refinement or Replacement” appeared in the Fall 1993 issue of the Washington and Lee Law Review.

Recent presentations given by Professor Donaldson include “Fiduciary Income Taxation” for the West Virginia Tax Conference and “Recent Developments in Estate Tax Law” for the Virginia Beach Foundation, sponsored by the Virginia Beach and Portsmouth Bar Association.

Professor Davison Douglas finished a book, The Desegregation of the Charlotte Schools, which will be published by the University of North Carolina Press, and an article, “The Rhetoric of Moderation: Desegregating the South During the Decade After Brown,” which will be published by Northwestern University Law Review. He also received his Ph.D. in history from Yale University in December 1992.

Professor Walter S. Felton, Jr. has been named deputy attorney general in the administration of newly elected Virginia Attorney General James S. Gilmore.

Professor Felton, who has been serving simultaneously on the law faculty and as administrator of the Virginia Commonwealth’s Attorneys’ Council, will be taking a leave of absence in order to serve in the new position. He will advise Gilmore on policy and legislative matters.

In 1993, Professor Felton received the Law School’s fifth annual John Marshall Award.

Professor Emerich Fischer is revising his casebook Principles of Insurance Law, originally published in 1986. Aside from updating materials in the present edition, he is adding new materials dealing with the impact of CERCLA and ERISA and health insurance and professional liability issues. The new edition is scheduled for a 1994 publication.

Professor Michael Gerhardt served in December 1992 and January 1993 as the principal author of the presidential transition policy study regarding the Clinton administration’s options for selecting federal district and circuit court judges and U.S. Attorneys and Marshals. During the past spring, he completed his work as a special consultant to the National Commission on Judicial Discipline and Removal. His analysis of the U.S. Senate’s process for disciplining federal judges was published as an appendix in the commission’s final report in August to Congress.

Over the summer, Professor Gerhardt taught health law at Fordham University School of Law Summer Program; gave talks on judicial selection to faculties at Fordham and Rutgers-Newark Law Schools; and completed an article critiquing the textualism of justices Black and Scalia that was published in the January 1994 issue of the Boston University Law Review.

In April 1993, Professor Hardy spoke on “The Use of Electronic Bulletin Boards for Scholarly Communication” at a conference entitled “Scholarly Humanities Communications in the Electronic Age” for the College’s Tercentenary.
Faculty Notes

Professor James Heller spoke on copyright-related issues before the Southeastern Chapter of the American Association of Law Libraries, the Louisiana/Mississippi Chapter of the Special Libraries Association, the Army Library Institute and the Greater Philadelphia Law Library Association. During the spring 1993 semester, Professor Heller and other staff librarians offered an advanced research course to Marshall-Wythe students for the first time.

Professor Heller is serving as chair of the Copyright Committee and as vice chair of the Education Committee of the American Association of Law Libraries. He also is vice president and president-elect of the Virginia Association of Law Libraries.

Associate Dean Robert Kaplan recently completed a two-year term on the Board of Directors of the National Association for Law Placement (NALP) and is chairing the NALP Nominating Committee for 1993-94. He participated in a panel on “Ethical Issues in Recruiting and Career Services” at the 1993 NALP National Conference. In 1994, Dean Kaplan will serve on a working group of the Virginia State Bar to explore the creation of a statewide loan forgiveness program.

Professor Charles H. Koch, Jr. continues to serve as editor-in-chief of the Administrative Law Review and has completed the 1994 supplement to his treatise Administrative Law and Practice. He has also completed a study with three others of federal administrative president officers for the Administrative Conference of the United States.

This past year, Professor Koch was re-elected to the Board of Governors of the Virginia State Bar’s administrative law section.

Professor Paul LeBel’s most recent book project is a set of teaching materials for the course in products liability. The book will be published next year by Foundation Press as a supplement to the Keeton, Owen, Montgomery & Green casebook on Product Liability and Safety.

Professor LeBel has added two more entries to his series of satirical articles about law schools in the Journal of Legal Education. “Deerly, Departed” appeared in the September 1992 issue of the Journal, and “The Law School Expansion Draft” is in the December 1993 issue. On the law and humor/law and baseball front, the Winter 1993 issue of the Novo Law Review included his article “The Bases are Loaded and It’s Time to Get a Restraining Order: The Confounding Conflation of America’s Two National Pastimes,” as part of a Humor in the Law symposium. Professor LeBel also contributed several book reviews to Trial, the magazine of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America.

Professor Fred Lederer completed the second edition of Courtroom Criminal Evidence with co-authors Edward Imwinkelried, Paul Giannelli and Francis Gilligan, to be published by the Michie Company. He also completed 1993 supplements for Court-Martial Procedure and The Federal Rules of Evidence in the States (Rules 201; 301-304) and completed new editions for the desktop-published Fundamental Criminal Procedure, Part II and Military Criminal Law. Court-Martial Procedure was used in the recent movie, A Few Good Men, and has been placed in the Law Library’s Rare Book Room.

Professor Lederer acted as executive editor and project director for the student-written Basic Virginia Law for Non-Lawyers, published by the College’s Society of the Alumni. He also supervised the Legal Skills firm of Lederer & Posey in implementing the Law School’s first firm-wide unanimous legal assistance project, in Southside Virginia. Among his 1993 lectures, Professor Lederer spoke before the 1993 Federal Administrative Law Judges Conference on “Junk Science” and Scientific Evidence After Daubert v. Merrill Dow Pharmaceuticals.” His article “Re-thinking Disciplinary Punishments: A Proposed Adoption of Unit Punishments,” published in the Military Review, received the Army War College’s Writing Award.

On the technology side, Professor Lederer’s “Kingdom v. Pigge, the Case of the Revoluting Magazine Selling Werewolf,” was telecast, produced by WHRO-TV and funded by the Virginia Law Foundation. In addition, Professor Lederer was responsible for the creation and direction of Courtroom 21, the world’s most technologically advanced courtroom, unveiled in September 1993.

Professor John Lee published two articles in 1993 derived from his research on the history of capital gains from 1920 to the present: “President Clinton’s Capital Gains Proposals,” and “Death, Taxes, and ‘Mellon-Heads’ Hypocrisy,” both in Tax Notes. The central theses of his 1992 article “Doping out the Capitalization Rules after INDOPOCO” (Tax Notes) were adopted by the IRS Assistant Chief Counsel in charge of rulings in the capitalization area as manifested by his reported comments in the tax press and in the “toxic waste” cleanup Technical Advice Memorandum (TAM) he issued in December 1993. That TAM in turn was, together with various other issues, the subject of a tax hearing in September 1993 for which Professor Lee submitted hearing statements on tax treatment of toxic waste cleanup costs and reform of like-kind exchanges—both of which should be published in 1994.

Many of Professor Lee’s articles have been cited frequently by courts and especially the IRS. His 1974 article in the Tax Law Review, “A Blend of Old Wines in a New Wineskin: Section 183 and Beyond,” served as a central foundation in the IRS’s first salvo against tax shelters in 1976. This same article was more recently cited by Mr. Justice Kennedy in a concurring opinion in Portland Golf Club v. Commissioner, for guidance as to “profit motivation.” The definitions of aggregate and entity approaches to partnership taxation contained in his 1988 article in the Virginia Tax Review, “Entity Classification and Integration: Publicly Traded Partnerships, and the Tax Legislative Process,” were paraphrased in an IRS Private Letter Ruling (PLR) in 1991 and then cookie-cutter copied in 134 more PLR’s from then until now (but who’s counting).

Professor John Levy has written, with Professor James Moliterno, Ethics of the Lawyer’s Work, published in the spring of 1993 by West Publishing Company.

Among his other activities, Professor Levy has been appointed to the Virginia State Bar Committee to revise the Code of Professional Responsibility. He has also initiated a Summer Law Program in Adelaide, Australia, and directs the summer program in Madrid.

Professor Linda Malone is co-counsel before the World Court on behalf of Bosnia in its lawsuit alleging complicity in genocide against the former Yugoslavia. She is also supervising a group of approximately 30 law students who have volunteered to assist the special committee established by the U.N. Security Council to investigate and compile documentation on the commission of war crimes in Bosnia for the U.N. Bosnian War Crimes Tribunal.

This past year, Professor Malone was selected to serve on the Board of Visitors for Duke Law School. She continues to serve as the associate editor of the Yearbook of International Environmental Law and on the Advisory Council on the National Enforcement Training Institute of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Professor Malone also served as chair of the Dean’s Search Committee at Marshall-Wythe.

Professor Malone’s recent publications also include two book reviews and Public International Law, a study guide to be published by Emmanuel’s.

Professor Paul Marcus was asked by President Timothy J. Sullivan to serve as acting dean for the 1993-94 academic year. In connection with this position he has visited Marshall-Wythe graduates in a number of different cit-ies and has spoken to civic groups throughout Virginia.

Professor Marcus served on the nominating committee of the Association for American Law Schools and was named United States National Reporter on Criminal Law to the Congress of the International Academy of Comparative Law. He will be addressing this International Congress next year in Athens, Greece.

During the past year, Professor Marcus spoke on numerous topics before various judicial, lawyer, university and student organizations across the country. He has been interviewed by many media organizations, including Time, Newsweek and the New York Times.

In addition, he chaired the Symposium on Criminal Justice held by the Bill of Rights Institute in the fall. His article, “A Return to the ‘Bright Line’ Rule of Miranda” was one of the lead articles in the written symposium published by the William and Mary Law Review.

Professor Marcus currently serves on the American Bar Association Committee on Rules of Criminal Procedure and Evidence, the ABA Subcommittee on White Collar Crime and the Virginia Advisory Task Force on Drug Testing. He is at work on the third edition of his co-authored casebook on criminal law.

Professor James Moliterno has written, with Professor John Levy, Ethics of the Lawyer’s Work, published in the spring of 1993 by West Publishing Company.

Recent talks given by Professor Moliterno include “The Defense Lawyer’s Duty of Confidentiality” for the Virginia Public Defender Commission Annual Conference and “Law Professors Working in CLE” for the Virginia State Bar Conclave II on the Education of Lawyers in Virginia.

Professor Alemante Selassie was elected in May 1993 to serve as one of the directors of the International Third World Legal Studies Association ("INTWORLSA"). INTWORLSA draws its membership from all parts of the World and publishes Third World Legal Studies on a regular basis. Also in May, Professor Selassie participated at the annual International Conference on the Horn of Africa held in the City of New York. He contributed a paper entitled "Constitution-Making Without a National Consensus: The Pitfalls of the Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front’s Constitutional Agenda."

More recently, Professor Selassie’s report, as constitutional correspondent for Ethiopia, appeared in Constitutions of the World.

Associate Dean Faye F. Shealy is the designated law school representative on the Executive Board of the Southern Association of Pre-Law Advisors. The appointment is for a two-year term. She has also been appointed to the Law School Admission Council (LSAC) Misconduct in the Admission Process Panel.

Professor Rodney Smolla continued his work as the director of the Institute of Bill of Rights Law, planning and participating in the Institute’s Supreme Court Preview and Criminal Law Symposium in the fall, and assisting in preparations for the spring’s Student Symposium and the Institute’s major conference in May 1994 to commemorate the 40th anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education.

During the last year, Professor Smolla published his annual supplement to his constitutional law casebook, Constitutional Law: Structure and Rights in our Federal System, his treatise Law of Defamation and the treatise Nimmer on Freedom of Speech. He published a number of articles, essays and reviews, including Report of the Coalition for a New America: Platform Section on Communications Policy for the University of Chicago Legal Forum, and Information, Imagery and the First Amendment: A Case for Expansive Protection of Commercial Speech in the Texas Law Review. He also wrote a play, The Trial of Oliver Wendell Holmes, which was performed as the UCLA Law School’s annual Nimmer Lecture.

Among the many speeches delivered by Professor Smolla last year, he was the keynote speaker for the Annual Administrative Law Judges Conference, on “The Future of Constitutional Law,” and spoke on “The Current State of the First Amendment” to the Libel Defense Resource Center/American Newspaper Association/National Association of Broadcasters Convention in Washington, D.C., and on “Newsgathering in the International Marketplace” at the International Bar Association Convention in New Orleans.

Professor Smolla also continued his public service activities, including chair of the Association of American Law Schools Conference on Constitutional Law, which held the first Constitutional Law Conference sponsored by the AALS in 10 years in the summer of 1993.

Professor Margaret Poles Spencer has been awarded the Virginia Women Attorneys Foundation Distinguished Faculty Award for 1994.

Professor Spencer, whose recent scholarship has focused on alternatives to prosecution for women engaged in prenatal drug abuse, was recognized for her “significant achievements regarding legal issues of particular interest to women, families, and women in the legal profession.”

Professor Richard Williamson published an article in the fall, “The Virtue (and Limits) of Shared Values: Miranda’s Concept of Custody and the Fourth Amendment,” in the Illinois Law Review, which has been selected for adaptation in the Search and Seizure Law Reporter. The 1993 supplement to Professor Williamson’s book, Defending Criminal Cases in Virginia, was also published this past fall.

In June, Professor Williamson participated in the Judge’s School, sponsored by the Supreme Court of Virginia, at the University of Virginia Law School. He also participated in the Recent Developments in the Law Seminar at the Virginia State Bar meeting in Virginia Beach in June. In August, Professor Williamson addressed the Newport News Bar Association on the subject of the future of legal education.

INSTITUTE INAUGURATES NEW BOOK SERIES

Constitutional Literacy: A Core Curriculum for a Multicultural Nation is the first title in the new law book series by the Institute of Bill of Rights Law. The book’s author is Toni Marie Massaro ’80, now a law professor at the University of Arizona College of Law.

The series, “Constitutional Conflicts,” is being published by Duke University Press. The series editors are Professor Rodney A. Smolla, director of the Institute, and Professor Neal Devins.

Massaro’s book analyzes the debate over a national education curriculum from a constitutional point of view.

“Any national curriculum proposal that fails to recognize our pluralism and conflicts along with our common commitments surely will be rejected by many Americans as a distorted portrayal of the national character and experience,” writes Massaro in her introduction.

The book has already won wide praise from experts in the field of higher education. E.D. Hirsch, the author of Cultural Literacy, calls it “a thoughtful and accurate work of scholarship that eschews ideology in discussing pressing needs of American education.”
Great lawyers possess disciplined minds, practical judgment and caring hearts. The statistics on the Class of 1996 tell only part of the story of the men and women new to Marshall-Wythe School of Law. We have reason to believe that beyond the numbers, which are impressive, they possess the virtues that are prerequisites to greatness—and that legal education at William and Mary will help them acquire the habits of mind and the special skills required to be great lawyers.

Although the number of applicants to ABA-approved law schools decreased 5.9 percent from the year before, at the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, applications for the 1992-93 admission year arrived in numbers slightly higher than in 1991-92. In fact, we received 3,417 applications for the roughly 175 spaces in the entering class. In the prior three years, we received an average of 3,348 first-year applications. The entering class compares favorably with the entering classes of the nation’s top 25 most selective law schools. The median LSAT for enrolled first-year students is 164 (93rd percentile) and the median undergraduate GPA is 3.34. Thirty-nine percent of the first-year students are women, and 14 percent identify themselves as members of an ethnic minority group. The admission program continues to pursue efforts to identify qualified applicants from around the country who might otherwise not consider Marshall-Wythe.

The students in the entering class of 1993 received undergraduate degrees from 84 different colleges and universities. They represent 21 states and the District of Columbia. More than 10 percent hold degrees from the College of William and Mary. Their median age... is 24. Although the majority of our students enroll within two years of graduating from college, almost half have full-time work experience or are switching to law from another pursuit. Among the first-year students are those who have had successful careers in business, engineering, journalism and research. Eleven of the entering students have graduate degrees. Fifteen have military experience. The diversity of work experience is represented by a congressional campaign manager, a translator, a financial analyst, a trial clerk for the U.S. Tax Court, an intelligence analyst for the U.S. Army, a factory laborer and a tugboat captain. Many entering students have studied abroad and several have worked abroad. Musicians, debaters, student body presidents, volunteers for a variety of organizations and varsity athletes representing many sports are among the entering class. They are Marshall-Wythe Law School's Class of 1996, impressive by any measure.

But the statistics tell only part of their story. The rest is a story of individuals: the interests, experiences and aspirations behind the numerical data. For in assembling each new class, we look closely at the personal qualities, in addition to applicants' academic credentials, seeking students whose intelligence and spirit can enhance both the Law School community and the legal profession.

My report would not be complete without an expression of gratitude for scholarship funds received from alumni and others who support our admission program. Let me assure you such support is an essential component in our recruitment efforts. Many students who may benefit from our program are influenced by the cost of attendance and scholarship packages from the competition.

I take this opportunity to extend appreciation to our deans, faculty and alumni who have made legal education at Marshall-Wythe what it is today. I am proud, in every positive sense of the word, to represent this program to prospective students and believe I have reason to take pride in introducing you to the Class of 1996.
Marshall-Wythe graduates are so helpful and supportive. Everyone I contacted was willing to meet with me, offer guidance, and make referrals. I hope I can return the favor one day.

— A May 1993 graduate who used alumni contacts to secure employment.

“These students are so impressive. They’re intelligent, engaging, and articulate. Their talents and experience are remarkable. I wonder whether I’d stand a chance of being admitted to the Law School if I applied today.”

— A graduate who participated in a mock interview program for first-year law students.

“What an extensive range of funding programs your law school has. It is encouraging to see such tangible support for students who want to explore public interest and government jobs.”

— A legal aid attorney, commenting on the Law School’s five public service funding programs for school-year and summer positions.

“William and Mary is to be commended on its innovative Legal Skills program. Our firm’s enthusiasm for the school has increased because of the program. We find William and Mary students prepared to begin practice and able to handle the intellectual and emotional challenges inherent in the private practice sector.”

— A hiring partner whose firm regularly recruits at Marshall-Wythe.

By mail, by phone and in person, these quotes—and many others like them—came my way during the past year. They capture four essential components of a successful career services program:

• alumni dedicated to helping present and future generations

Many other factors contribute to the vitality of a career services operation. But measured by these four core elements, these are exciting times at William and Mary.

THE CLASS OF 1993

As of October 1993, the Class of 1993 reported employment in 24 states, the District of Columbia, and one foreign country. Virginia accounted for 41 percent of the class, followed by the District of Columbia; Maryland; Pennsylvania; Georgia; Connecticut; Delaware; Florida; New Mexico; New York; Ohio; and West Virginia. One graduate reported employment in Alaska; California; Colorado; Hawaii; Illinois; Kentucky; Maine; Michigan; New Jersey; North Carolina; Oregon; Rhode Island; and Tennessee.

PUBLIC INTEREST INITIATIVES

Generous contributions by many graduates, joined by students, faculty, staff, and friends of the Law School, enabled the William and Mary Public Service Fund to enjoy a record fundraising year in 1992-93. This past year also marked the creation of two new summer public interest fellowships.

The first Walter L. Williams, Jr. Fellowships in International Public Interest Law were awarded for summer 1993. The fellowships honor the late Professor Walter L. Williams, Jr., whose distinguished career in international law and as an officer in the Judge Advocate General’s Corps included 19 years as a member of the Law School faculty. The inaugural fellowships funded students who worked in Hong Kong to secure an officer in the Judge Advocate General’s Corps included 19 years as a member of the Law School faculty. The inaugural fellowships funded students who worked in Hong Kong to secure freedom for Chinese political dissidents and in Kenya assisting rural Africans with their legal needs and protecting international jurists.

The Bell Public Service Fellowships were made possible by a generous endowment established by Jane West Bell. The first Bell Fellowships, to support several students in government or public interest positions anywhere in the world, will be awarded for summer 1994.

The Williams and Bell Fellowships bring to six the Law School’s funding programs for school-year and summer public interest positions. Over 60 students benefitted from these programs during 1992-93.

ALUMNI ACTIVITIES AND SERVICES

Marshall-Wythe graduates are always willing to help. Last year was no exception. Alumni interviewed on campus for their employers, participated in panels and programs sponsored by OCPP, served as mentors through the Co-Counsel Program, spoke informally with students, and conducted mock interviews of first-year students.

OCPP served graduates in many ways. Law Leads Line, the prerecorded, automated job listing service exclusively for Marshall-Wythe alumni, logged an average of 60 to 70 calls per week during its first year of operation. We sponsored the third annual Recent Graduates Job Fair for new bar admits seeking their first law-related position. Through individual advising sessions and by arranging use of law school career services offices near their homes, we assisted hundreds of graduates across the country and from many graduating classes.

I conclude this report the way it started, with a quote: “OCPP wants YOU.” (My apologies to James Montgomery Flagg, the artist who painted the famous World War I recruiting poster depicting Uncle Sam.) In a competitive job market, OCPP and our students continue to rely on Marshall-Wythe alumni. Please contact OCPP if you or your employer is looking for students or graduates. Call if you hear of any school-year, summer, entry-level or lateral openings with other employers. Let us know if you are willing to participate in any of our programs. Serve as a referral and become part of a network when a student or graduate contacts you for information. In short, please continue the admirable tradition of assistance that has become the hallmark of Marshall-Wythe graduates nationwide.

As we begin a new year and a new century, the focus must be on building for the future. Each of you has a role in that future and a stake in each new gain we make together.

The momentum keeps growing! Last year, for the third time, giving to the Law School topped $1 million. A record number of alumni as well as many parents and friends made it possible, and we are grateful for every one of you.

This has been an exciting and historic year for the College of William and Mary and for the Marshall-Wythe School of Law. We achieved national attention last February, when His Royal Highness Prince Charles launched the Tercentenary Celebration with a remarkable and moving address in William and Mary Hall before a capacity crowd and media from around the world.

In May, we graduated the Class of 1993 and marked the 200th anniversary of the granting of the first law degree at William and Mary—and in North America—to William H. Cabell. At the graduation ceremony in Zable Stadium, several of Cabell’s descendants received a replica of the first diploma.

Last June, we cemented historic ties to the Drapers’ Company in England with an alumni reception and dinner with Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth in Drapers’ Hall. An ancient philanthropic order, the Drapers’ Company endowed an annual exchange program in 1991 for graduating third-year students and students from Queen Mary in Westfield College.

Finally, we celebrated five reunions at Homecoming 1993 with the largest attendance ever. Hundreds of Law School alumni joined thousands of College alumni in a five-day Tercentenary bash that renewed old friendships and was the culmination of a grand year for students, faculty and alumni.

While high-profile events insured enthusiasm and excitement throughout the year, more than 200 dedicated alumni leaders kept the momentum going at the Law School. Whether as class agents, firm leaders, chapter liaisons or co-counsel mentors, individual alumni contributed hundreds of hours of time to support students and faculty in their work.

The outpouring of support also meant record levels of investment in the Law School and its future. Under the leadership of Ray Stoner ’71, the Foundation pushed the total endowment supporting the law school to over $13 million dollars by the end of the fiscal year. The Law School contributed significantly to the success of the College-wide Campaign for the Fourth Century in surpassing its goal of $150 million in gifts and commitments.

Just as important as total dollars raised is the percentage of alumni supporting the Law School. There are only a few public law schools in the country that have a higher percentage of alumni giving than Marshall-Wythe—the credit for which goes to Rob Elliott ’69 and Bruce McNew ’79 and their Annual Fund team. Among the most exciting and telling figures are that 66 percent of the graduating third-years and 97 percent of the faculty made gifts or pledges that were matched by a challenge from Rob and Bruce. Alumni, faculty and students all participated in record numbers to reach our highest-ever goal of $350,000.

What is most remarkable is the impact that your support has on the quality of education that is offered at the Law School. The alumni and friends of Marshall-Wythe have focused their efforts on making a difference. For example, one quarter of all law students receive financial aid provided by the Annual Fund or the endowment and over one-third of the faculty hold endowed chairs.

The challenge is to sustain our momentum.

Although I sense a growing satisfaction that the Law School is finally gaining the national acclaim it deserves, our success thus far has only increased our desire for further achievement. Certainly, many students, faculty and alumni sense that the next level of recognition is almost within our grasp.

As we begin a new year and a new century, the focus must be on building for the future. Each of you has a role in that future and a stake in each new gain we make together.

The Law School Association developed a special focus in 1992-93: involving more students in alumni activities and involving more alumni in helping students. We have sought to make all students, from their first day on campus, feel the benefits of being Marshall-Wythe alumni.

The Association is promoting this alumni-student relationship through a variety of programs, including:

Admitted Students Luncheon

Each year in the spring, admitted applicants are invited to campus to learn about Marshall-Wythe. The Association sponsors a buffet luncheon in the lobby with alumni hosts, followed by a panel discussion with current students and alumni about life after law school and the William and Mary family.

Co-Counsel Program

In its third year, the Law School’s alumni mentor program matched more than 250 students with more than 225 alumni “senior counsel.” From their first week on campus, students benefit from the advice and support of alumni.

Mock Interview Program

First- and second-year students get interviewing experience with alumni volunteers who meet with students and critique their interviewing skills. Coordinated with the Office of Career Planning and Placement, this program reached more than one-third of all first-year students in 1992-93.

Chapter Activities

All students are encouraged to attend alumni chapter activities, especially the Dean’s Receptions. In the past year, two chapters also sponsored receptions for applicants to meet alumni and current students.

Minority Students Outreach

Last year the Association worked with the Black Law Student Association to host a reception with African-American alumni. Alumni also attended a luncheon for prospective students at BLSA Law Day.

Graduation Reception

Following the 1993 commencement exercises, alumni welcomed all graduating students into the Alumni Association with a reception for students and their parents.

You can become involved by volunteering as a co-counsel mentor or a mock interviewer, and by arranging or attending a function for students and alumni in your area. With an increasingly challenging job market, you also can help students by calling the Office of Career Planning and Placement whenever you hear of a job opening and by serving as an informal advisor to students who may call seeking information and encouragement about practicing law in your geographic area or field of expertise.

Help your Association in supporting future alumni by contacting the Office of Development and Alumni Affairs at (804) 221-3795.
Classnotes

The 1930s

Joseph Cridlin '35 is a retired circuit court judge for the Commonwealth of Virginia. He lives in Jonesville, Va.

The 1940s

Retired general district judge William Wellington Jones '47 sits by designation when needed. He is active in civic and church organizations in Suffolk, Va.

Virginia Till Lemmon '47 (College '43) retired in 1989 as a professor at the Rutgers School of Law, Law Library, in Newark, N.J. She remains active in the New Jersey Law Librarians Association, of which she was a founding member. She is the co-author of a cross-reference table for New Jersey statutes annotated to the New Jersey Administrative Code and continues its update. She stays busy with family, grandchildren, two dogs and swimming. She writes: "In May of 1993 I attended the [College] '43 class reunion. It was perfect in every way. Quite an occasion!"

With regret, we announce the death of Francis Clark '48, who passed away on July 20, 1993.

Ira Bernard Dworkin '48 (College '43) reports: "Shirley and I attended my Class of '43 50th reunion at William and Mary in May. One hundred and thirty people attended and presented the class gift of $129,000 to the College. I did my share. Other law graduates attending included J. Edgar Pointer '49 of Gloucester County and Virginia Till Lemmon '47 of Haworth, N.J. I'm 70 years young! Shirley and I are enjoying retirement. On July 15, we celebrated our 42nd wedding anniversary in Halifax, Nova Scotia, on a great 9-day trip."

The 1950s

Daniel Bradley '52 writes: "I have retired from practice in both Virginia and Connecticut, but do take the occasional referral. I am still active with my avocation and take part in local, county and state fire communication services."

John Scozzari '59 was appointed operations manager for Lawyers Title Insurance Corp. in New Jersey. His office was moved to Parsippany from Summit, N.J.

The 1960s

William Wellons '68 was elected by the 1993 Virginia General Assembly to serve an eight-year term as a circuit judge in the Tenth Judicial Circuit of Virginia.

Joseph (Joe) Smith '69 writes: "After many years with the FBI in New York and then various assignments at FBI headquarters in Washington, in September 1992 I was assigned as assistant legal attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Brussels, Belgium. I will be here three years. My wife and three children are with me, enjoying Europe, studying French and—perhaps next year—Dutch. I have been named chair of the recently created Subcommittee on Mutual Legal Assistance, International Criminal Law Committee, of the International Law Practice Section of the ABA."

The 1970s

Anthony Gaeta, Jr. '70 of New Bern, N.C., was featured with his family in an August 1993 Washington Post article on family camps. His family—wife Becky and children Charlie, Tom, Tootie and Laura—were photographed at the Kingsley Pine Family Camp in southern Maine. He writes, "In the end, it's family that matters—and gets you the most attention and reward."

Richard (Rick) Anderson, Jr. '73 has just been named partner-in-charge of his firm's Louisville, Ky., office, a 70-lawyer office and one of three offices (Lexington, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio, being the other two) comprising the 120-lawyer firm of Greenebaum, Doll & McDonald. The firm's founding partner is A. Robert Doll '51.

Steve Bickford '73 announces the birth of his daughter, Hadley Rastad Bickford, on July 14, 1993. He is currently handling a construction class action case in Denver for his firm, Epstein & Englert in San Francisco, and working with classmate Les Roos. He writes: "In the small world department, I wound up in the room next to classmate Dabney Pasco at the Nisbet Plantation on Nevis."

Mary Albanese Discini '73 was recently married to Armand Discini. The couple live in Mahwah, N.J.

Samuel T. Powell '73 was elevated from the Juvenile and Domestic Relations District Court Bench to the Circuit Court, Ninth Judicial Circuit of the Commonwealth of Virginia, on July 1, 1993.

Richard (Rick) Brown '74 is currently practicing real estate law in suburban Philadelphia. His twins, who were born while he was at the Law School, are now juniors in college. He is a part-time resident of Williamsburg and spends as much time there as possible. Rick will be the 1994-95 Annual Fund Chairman.
George Campbell, Jr. ’74 has been elected by the Virginia State Bar Council to the American Bar Association’s House of Delegates. He will represent Virginia before the ABA House of Delegates for a two-year term. Campbell’s firm, George W. Campbell, Jr. & Associates, is located in Arlington, Va.

Curtis Coward ’74, a partner in the Tysons Corner office of McGuire, Woods, Battle & Booth, will serve as client attorney in the firm’s representation of the Ministry of Geology and Earth Preservation of the Republic of Kazakhstan, a member of the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Coward will manage a team of attorneys, who will represent the Ministry in all negotiations with natural-resource exploration and development companies regarding licensing, co-production and joint ventures, and provide recommendations on laws and regulations regarding natural-resource exploration and recovery.

Elisa Grammer ’76 announces the opening of the firm Grammer, Kissel, Robbins & Skancke in Washington, D.C., on June 1, 1993. The firm specializes in energy, environmental and administrative law, serving municipal and corporate clients.

John Richardson ’76 was elected the 1993 president of the Virginia Beach Bar Association.

Rod Seafood ’77 is with the Charlotte, N.C., firm Elam, Seafood & McGinnis, practicing bankruptcy, corporate and personal injury law. In September 1993 he was elected to a two-year term as national chair for AAU (Amateur Athletic Union) Basketball. He was also appointed chair of the Cadet and Youth Competition Committee for USA Basketball.

Robert H. Brink ’78 was appointed by President Clinton on July 22, 1993, as deputy assistant attorney general for legislative affairs, U.S. Department of Justice. Prior to that time, he had served as deputy general counsel, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. House of Representatives.

Sarah Collins Honenberger ’78, living in Orange, Va., writes: “Turning 40 has helped me see that practicing law is one of many things in my life. I vowed to travel more and started with Italy. My sons are 11 and 9, my future ‘smithie’ is 6 1/2.” Her husband, Christopher Honenberger ’77, echoes those sentiments, writing: “Turning 40 has given me great freedom to enjoy the finer things in life: my children, golf and great wine.”

H. Van Z. Lawrence ’78 reports: “My 12th year in solo private practice finds me concentrating on real estate, probate, collections, business and international law, and finally getting away from family law. My wife, Catherine, is a substitute elementary school teacher. My daughter, Alicia, my daughter, has just started kindergarten.”

Jeffrey Puff ’78 is working with a firm in New Jersey that specializes in the legal needs of individuals, including personal injury, real estate, and family law cases. He writes: “The alumni directory has been a valuable tool for me in referring cases and getting local counsel. I have dealt with Karen Kemps ’78 in Chicago, and Rick Adams ’78, Joe Waldo ’78 and Jim Thurman ’76 in Virginia. Bob Emmett ’78 also helped me find local counsel in Williamsburg for some elderly clients of mine who were moving to Williamsburg to retire.”

Kevin Brunick ’79 reports that he won the Polish Open Trophy for the second consecutive year. His description of the competition: “Begun at the now-defunct Bypass Road Mini-Golf in 1977, this year’s Open was played at the challenging Military Circle Putt-Putt in Norfolk. Among the vanquished this year were Mike Soberick ’79, Bob Rapaport ’79 and Ward Eason ’79. Perennial also-rans who begged out this year were Bob Rae ’79. Larry Davis ’79, Ken Geroe ’79 and Jim Hixon ’79.”

Beverly Hunter Karch ’79 was appointed to the Workers’ Compensation bench for Passaic and Bergen counties in New Jersey on Feb. 19, 1993. She has been an adjunct professor of law at Seton Hall University School of Law and served as house counsel for Continental Insurance Co. as well as practicing with her own firm.

Rich Pickard ’79 and Carol Hill Pickard ’79 are living in Los Gatos, Calif. Rich remains general counsel of Zilog, Inc., a semiconductor manufacturer. Carol practices civil litigation, primarily insurance defense, in San Jose. She is now a partner and also volunteers as a court-appointed arbitrator and judge pro tem. They both keep busy with the activities of their three children, especially soccer, which Rich coaches.

WILLIAM & MARY LAW
THE AWARDING OF THE FIRST BACHElOR OF LAW DEGREE IN AMERICA
200th ANNIVERSARY
1793 - 1993
MARSHALL-WYTE THE SCHOOL OF LAW.
ON THE FRONT COVER

Lord Botetourt once again stands in front of the Wren Building, after an absence of nearly 40 years. The new statue of Norborne Berkeley, Baron de Botetourt, is a bronze replica of the beloved marble statue which stood in the College Yard from 1801 to 1958. Sculpted by Gordon Kray, a 1973 alumnus of the College, the new work was dedicated during Tercentenary Homecoming, on Saturday, October 23.

The Botetourt statue was made possible by several friends of the College as part of a special Tercentenary art project.
