WILLIAMSBURG

William B. Spong, Jr., dean of the William and Mary School of Law at the College of William and Mary, will deliver a three-week course in the law of the United States seminar for distinguished jurists.

He will be a member of the law faculty at American Law and Legal Institutions at the Stetson University in America.

The faculty includes William T. Strong, associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court; Orford Cooper, professor at the University of Chicago law school; James O. Frerichs, associate professor and dean of the University of Chicago law school; and Theodor J. O. Hasserton, professor and former dean at the University of Michigan law school; and Spong.

The three-week course will include a series of lectures by each faculty member and informal group meetings with about 15 former lawyers who have been selected to attend. Spong will lecture on the American legal system.
