WASHINGTON, MARCH 5, 1863.

The Sesquicentennial anniversary of the first meeting of the Continental Congress has been celebrated with great enthusiasm throughout the country. The events of that day are remembered with pride and reverence by all Americans, as the occasion of the birth of our nation. The festivities included parades, speeches, and the laying of the cornerstone of a monument to commemorate the event.

TAXES AND REBELLION.

The President addressed the House of Representatives on the subject of taxes and rebellion. He stated that the government was faced with a serious financial crisis due to the ongoing Civil War. The President urged the Congress to increase taxes to fund the war effort, and to enforce the laws to suppress rebellion. He also called for a strong military presence to maintain order.

ABDICATION OF PRINCIPLES.

The President further stated that the principles of the United States Constitution were being abandoned in the pursuit of war. He called for a return to the principles of liberty, equality, and justice, and for the preservation of the Union.

DIPLOMATIC AFFAIRS.

The President discussed the diplomatic situation with Europe. He expressed concern over the increasing tensions with Great Britain, and the possibility of war. He also mentioned the need to strengthen alliances with other countries to ensure the safety and prosperity of the United States.

FURTHER ACTION.

The President concluded his address by calling for further action from Congress. He urged them to support his policies and to work together to achieve the common goal of winning the war and preserving the Union.
