1975

ABA Also Hit W&M School as Dependent

Wilford Kale
ABA Also Hit
W&M School
As Dependent

By Wilford Kale
Times Dispatch, Oct. 15, 1975

The American Bar Association's Marshall-Wythe School of Law at the College of William and Mary is facing several serious problems in addition to the much publicized inadequacy of physical facilities.

Dr. Thomas A. Graves Jr., college president, told a press conference Sept. 30 that representatives of the American Bar Association's Council on Accrediting had visited Williamsburg.

"We feel that the school should move toward multiple-discipline programs," the spokesman said.

"We're not dealing with the issue of poor facilities."

The school should move toward multiple-discipline programs.

But according to the spokesman, the school should move toward multiple-discipline programs.

The school should move shortly toward multiple-discipline programs.

''The ABA visiting
committee found that the William
and Mary administration
should move toward multiple-discipline programs.

Tightened to Discuss It

The ABA committee visited
Virginia, which visited
Libby, Virginia.

William and Mary officials
have received reports from
the ABA indicating that the law
school should move toward
multiple-discipline programs.

People have received reports from
the ABA indicating that the law
school should move toward
multiple-discipline programs.

The ABA visiting
committee found that the William
and Mary administration
should move toward multiple-discipline programs.

Tightened to Discuss It

The ABA committee visited
Virginia, which visited
Libby, Virginia.

William and Mary officials
have received reports from
the ABA indicating that the law
school should move toward
multiple-discipline programs.

People have received reports from
the ABA indicating that the law
school should move toward
multiple-discipline programs.

Tightened to Discuss It

The ABA committee visited
Virginia, which visited
Libby, Virginia.

William and Mary officials
have received reports from
the ABA indicating that the law
school should move toward
multiple-discipline programs.

People have received reports from
the ABA indicating that the law
school should move toward
multiple-discipline programs.