W&M Dean Speaks at Law Seminar, Says Changes Needed in State Laws

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Feb. 15—Widely known and respected
Virginia lawyer Dean J. Aubrey Russell Jr., president of the William and Mary Law School, was the principal speaker at the annual meeting of the Virginia State Bar Association in Williamsburg today.

Dean Russell, whose specialty is corporate law, delivered the keynote address, speaking on "Legal Problems of the Corporation." His address covered a wide range of topics, from corporation law to the rights of shareholders and the responsibilities of corporate boards.

Dean Russell spoke about the importance of corporate governance, highlighting the need for transparency and accountability in business operations. He called for a more proactive approach to corporate social responsibility, emphasizing the role of corporations in addressing environmental and social issues.

Dean Russell also discussed the need for improved legal standards in the areas of data privacy and cyber security, advocating for stronger measures to protect personal information.

Other topics he addressed included the role of corporations in promoting economic development, the importance of access to justice, and the need for continued legal education and professional development.

Dean Russell's address was well-received by the audience, who praised his insights and guidance on the evolving legal landscape.

The annual meeting of the Virginia State Bar Association is held each year to bring together lawyers from across the state to discuss the latest developments in the legal profession and to network with colleagues.

Dean Russell's remarks focused on the importance of ethical representation and the need for lawyers to uphold the highest standards of professionalism in serving their clients and the public.
