W&M Law School To Get Tenants

Williamsburg -- Virginia Commonwealth's attorney and students in the Marshall-Wythe School of Law in Richmond will benefit from the affiliation. Tenants will live in a newly constructed building.

In a recent meeting, the Virginia Commonwealth University's Law School dean, W. Clay Naff, and the Virginia Bar Association's president, Dr. John H. Thomas, discussed the benefits of the affiliation. They agreed that the tenants would benefit from the close association with the law school.

"The affiliation is a win-win situation for everyone," said Dr. Thomas. "The students will have access to the resources of the law school, while the University will have a skilled and dedicated group of tenants."
