The third article of the treaty of alliance provides that the inhabitants of the said territory shall be governed by the laws of the state of New Hampshire, and by such local laws as the Congress of the United States may from time to time make and enforce within the same. This provision is essentially the same as that contained in the treaty of alliance with Vermont, and is intended to give the inhabitants of the territory a voice in their own government.

By the terms of the treaty we are entitled to, as the rights of American citizens; and to the free exercise of our religion and of the liberty of the press. But it is to be remembered that the treaty does not give us any right to vote in the elections of the United States, nor do we have any voice in the legislation of the United States. We are therefore subject to the laws of New Hampshire, and must obey them.

It is to be noted that the treaty does not give us any right to vote in the elections of the United States, nor do we have any voice in the legislation of the United States. We are therefore subject to the laws of New Hampshire, and must obey them.

The above is a summary of the treaty of alliance between the United States and New Hampshire. It is a treaty of friendship and commerce, and is designed to promote the welfare and prosperity of both nations.
