I. ASSAULTS AND RELATED OFFENSES

Several crimes of violence, threatened violence, or even potential violence are included in a chapter unfortunately entitled "Assault."¹ This generic nomenclature is confusing in light of several of these offenses not constituting any form of assault. Two of these non-assaultive offenses—Going Armed With Intent² and Setting Spring Guns and Mantraps³—are discussed in this Article in the more appropriate chapter on weapons offenses.

A. "Felonious Assault" Classification

Whether or not the various individual offenses in this chapter are actually aggravated forms of assault is crucial in several respects, all of which relate only to whether a particular offense is a "felonious assault,"⁴ which in turn automatically qualifies as a "forcible felony."⁵ The term "felonious assault" has been defined by the supreme court as "any assault the commission of which constitutes a felony."⁶ Thus, any offense either in the "Assault" chapter or elsewhere in the Criminal Code⁷ which is a felony (of any

 7. That the classification "felonious assault" is not limited to offenses in the "Assault" chapter is evidenced by Attempted Murder, IOWA CODE § 707.11 (1979), being determined by the supreme court in State v. Powers, 278 N.W.2d 26 (Iowa 1978), to be a "felonious assault."

class) "and necessarily includes an assault"⁸ is a "felonious assault," as discussed above.⁹

B. Assault

Unlike the pre-revised statute¹⁰ which merely used the common law name of Assault¹¹ without defining it, the revised statute¹² specifically defines an assault as essentially being either an attempted battery or an activity which places another in fear of a battery¹³ the latter type being an expansion of the prior law. Like the prior statute, however, a consummated battery¹⁴ is not required and a simple battery is punishable under the Assault statute itself.¹⁵ Assault, however, is now a specific intent crime,¹⁶ unlike the pre-revised law,¹⁷ and thus there can be no *negligent*¹⁸ assaults (or batteries).

The elements of the revised crime of Assault specifically are: (1) without justification; (2) and with apparent ability to execute the act; (3) doing

15. "One who attempts to strike another commits an assault. If he succeeds in striking the other, it is an assault only, not assault and battery." W. LAFAYE & A. SCOTT, supra note 12, § 80. An aggravated battery, inflicted intentionally, which results in a "serious injury" is punishable under the serious (class C felony) offense of Willful Injury, however. See IOWA CODE § 708.4 (1979).

18. W. LAFAYE & A. SCOTT, supra note 12, § 80, states:

A battery of the criminal-negligence type as where motorist A by reckless driving unintentionally injures pedestrian B, does not include an assault, which requires an intent to injure or (alternatively, in many jurisdictions) to frighten. So at most it can properly be said only that every intentional battery necessarily includes an assault.

any act; (4) with the intent either to (a) cause pain or injury, (b) result in insulting or offensive physical contact, or (c) place another in fear of immediate physical contact of a painful, injurious, insulting, or offensive nature. The focus of these assaultive acts is upon the intended results, thus not requiring specified results. For example, no touching is required, nor need the victim of the assault actually be frightened when the assault consists of an attempt to commit a battery. Nor need there even be an actual intent to commit a battery, when the assault consists of a threat intended to place another person in fear of a battery.

The apparent ability requirement could be troublesome, in light of the statutory phraseology which fails to make clear to whom the ability to execute the act must be apparent.¹⁹ Because the statute focuses upon the defendant-actor's conduct, Professor Yeager feels that the apparent ability refers to the actor.²⁰ Accordingly, a defendant threatening to detonate a simulated explosive would not be guilty of the offense, provided that he knew it would not explode. Such a result does not seem reasonable. The proper focus of attention should be solely upon the defendant's act of threatening to detonate what would appear to a reasonable person to be a real explosive. After all, the defendant's act was intended to place another in fear, and the act of placing another in fear is all that is necessary in order for the crime of Assault to be complete.

A third enumerated type of Assault occurs either by²¹ (a) intentionally pointing a firearm²² toward another, or (b) displaying in a threatening manner any dangerous weapon toward another. The first alternative was retained from the prior law,²³ while the second represents an expansion to the types of weapons covered²⁴ under the assault provisions. This type of Assault—which focuses entirely upon the defendant's conduct—contains no apparent ability requirement, nor does it require proof of any specific intent. Thus, the defendant's purpose in pointing the firearm is irrelevant.²⁵ Like

See State v. Yanda, 259 Iowa 970, 146 N.W.2d 255 (1966).

This is subject, of course, to the “limited consent defense,” which is discussed immediately below in the text accompanying notes 40-55 infra. “Actors in a play are not guilty of assault when one points a firearm at the other, when the script calls for this.” TRAINING MANUAL, supra note 14, at 47.

the pre-revised law,²⁶ the weapon need not be loaded²⁷ (and, of course, the discharging of it is unnecessary). Nor should it be necessary that the person who was assaulted know or have reason to believe that the weapon was loaded,²⁸ in light of the fact that the assault statute focuses entirely upon the defendant's conduct.²⁹

1. Overt Act

The requirement of an act for Assault means that the common law principle that mere words, even if they are threatening, do not constitute an assault³⁰ remains unchanged. Because an overt act is essential to an assault of the attempted-battery type, it has been stated that: "the force intended to be applied must be put in motion; otherwise there is merely an intention, and not an attempt, to inflict the battery. Mere preparations or mere words and threats, whatever may be the intention, can never amount to an assault; there must be some act which, if not stopped, may apparently . . . produce injury."³¹ At first blush, it appears that mere words could be the basis of the new second type of Assault: placing another in fear of a battery. Nevertheless, the requirement of an act apparently precludes this interpretation. As summarized by one commentator:

Criminal assault [by intentional scaring] needs, in addition to (1) the intent-to-scare mental element and (2) the apprehension result element, (3) the further requirement of some conduct by the defendant, conduct of the sort to arouse a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm. Thus it is not enough to constitute an assault to give another a fierce look intended to frighten, though the other is actually frightened by the look. So, too, threatening words alone, without any overt act to carry out the threat, or indecent proposals by a man to a woman, not accompanied by any attempt to carry them out without her consent, will not do.³²

Cursing another, without a show of force, has been held to not constitute an assault, even though the victim was, in fact, frightened.³³ In contrast, the act of "lifting the fist or a cane in a threatening manner" has been considered sufficient for an assault where the other requisites were present.³⁴

Some commentators have suggested that an exception be made for informational words,³⁵ thus permitting a conviction for Assault, without an overt act. The most common example given is accosting someone from behind or in the darkness while claiming to have a weapon, such as, "make one move and I'll shoot." While this certainly would have the effect of frightening the victim, nevertheless this circumstance does not appear applicable to Iowa law, in light of the express statutory requirement that there be the apparent ability to execute the act (of shooting). Something more than a bald assertion of having a weapon should be required (e.g., sticking a blunt object against the victim's back or simulating the cocking sound of a firearm). Of course, the third type of Assault under Code § 708.1(3) occurs when a firearm actually is pointed at another or is displayed in a threatening manner.

2. Assault on Peace Officer

A legislative bill providing for a mandatory jail term for an assault on an on-duty peace officer failed to pass in 1979.³⁶ Not only would a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence have been unavailable, but in addition, the defendant would have been ineligible for parole (and thus would have to serve the maximum sentence imposed by law) under this proposed law. This bill presumably would only have included the simple misdemeanor³⁷ offense of simple Assault and would not have included the aggravated assault offenses such as Assault with Intent to Inflict Serious Injury.³⁸

A more practical approach for the General Assembly to adopt for special punishment³⁹ assaultive attacks on peace officers would be to create a new serious misdemeanor⁴⁰ crime for a battery intentionally inflicted on

A simple misdemeanor is punishable in the sentencing judge's discretion, by either a determinate or fixed period of confinement for any number of days up to thirty days or a fine in any amount not exceeding $100, but not both. IOWA CODE § 903.2(3) (1979). All of the ameliorative sentencing alternatives (i.e., a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation) are available in lieu of the prescribed allowable confinement or fine. Id. § 907.3.

40. A serious misdemeanor is punishable in the sentencing judge's discretion, by either a determinate or fixed period of confinement for any number of days up to one year or a fine in any amount not exceeding $1,000, or both (confinement and a fine). IOWA CODE § 903.2(2) (1979). All of the ameliorative sentencing alternatives (i.e., a deferred sentence, a deferred judgment, or a suspended sentence of probation) are available in lieu of the prescribed allowable peace officers. This would authorize a sentencing court in its sound judicial discretion to impose a jail sentence in excess of the thirty day limitation for simple Assault in situations of aggravated assaults short of being an Assault with Intent to Inflict Serious Injury.

3. Domestic Abuse

Amidst a flurry of legislative bills on the subject, the Iowa General Assembly in 1979 passed the Domestic Abuse Act.⁴¹ Although closely tied to the offense of Assault, this new act will appear as a separate chapter in the next Iowa Code.⁴² "Domestic abuse" is statutorily defined as an assault between co-habiting family or household members, including separated spouses not residing together at the time of the assault.⁴³ Moreover, a victim's rights are not affected by leaving the residence or household to avoid domestic abuse.⁴⁴ On the other hand, children under eighteen unfortunately are not protected,⁴⁵ thus rendering the act in essence a wife abuse act.

The primary purpose of this statute is to provide an avenue for a family or household member to seek a protective court order to prevent domestic abuse by another family or household member, including a separated spouse.⁴⁶ Also included are provisions for temporary and emergency orders prior to a hearing, with violations of either this order or a court-appointed consent agreement to be punishable as Contempt.⁴⁷ This act wisely does not include a provision included in another bill which makes it a crime for a peace officer to not speedily file assault charges upon request by an alleged victim of domestic abuse.⁴⁸ Police discretion in filing criminal charges is desirable; of course, the victim may file the charge directly.⁴⁹

The aforementioned civil proceeding is, by express terms of the statute, "in addition to any other civil or criminal remedy."⁵⁰ Thus, it merely sets out the obvious as to the crime of Assault covering disputes between family or household members, without making any changes in the criminal law. No new crimes are added and no crimes are expanded. Furthermore, no changes are made in the penalty schedules.

4. Grading

The only grade of simple Assault is a simple misdemeanor,⁵¹ which is the lowest classification of criminal activity in the Iowa Code. This one grade encompasses an overly broad range of criminal activity: merely threatening another with injury, actually injuring another, and pointing a firearm at another.

5. Consent as Defense

A "limited consent defense" has been codified to excuse contact, which otherwise would constitute an assault,⁵² between "voluntary participants in a sport, social or other activity, not in itself criminal."⁵³ However, an otherwise assaultive act must be "a reasonably foreseeable incident of such sport or activity" and must not create "an unreasonable risk of serious injury or breach of the peace."⁵⁴ If both of these provisos are not met, then the defense will not be applicable. Moreover, because of the restrictive nature of these limitations, it appears that this defense is available only on a charge of simple Assault. The defense, by its express terms, does not apply at all as a general defense to criminal activity, and thus would never be available to legitimize such inherently criminal activities as "street fights, barroom brawls, and sado-masochistic excesses."⁵⁵ The burden of disproving the existence of this special defense is placed upon the prosecution in Uniform Jury Instruction No. 809.

C. Assault With Intent to Inflict Serious Injury

The least serious of the aggravated forms of Assault in the new Criminal Code is the crime of Assault With Intent to Inflict Serious Injury,⁵⁶ as the successor to the pre-revised crime of Assault With Intent to Inflict Great Bodily Injury.⁵⁷ Professor Yeager is of the opinion that the two terms are comparable.⁵⁸ It is submitted that such an opinion is incorrect,⁵⁹ however,

51. See note 37 supra.

52. This proviso "recognizes that acts which may constitute an assault when committed in one context may be permissible in another context, and that the statutory distinction between permissible and impermissible physical contact should be clearly delineated." because the degree of specificity in the standard of "serious injury"⁶⁰ appears to portend considerably more than the basically undefinable former standard of "great bodily injury."⁶¹ This former term has been interpreted as "an injury to the person greater than that which ordinarily results from a single altercation between parties with the fists or the like."⁶² This standard seems to be less than the considerably more demanding standards for a "serious injury," specifically, serious permanent disfigurement, disabling mental illness, or protracted loss or impairment of a function of any bodily organ.

1. Grading

The grading of this offense complicates matters further. As an aggravated misdemeanor,⁶³ the maximum jail sentence for this offense is two years, as opposed to the one-year maximum under the forerunner statute. Yet, the maximum penalty for the next lower misdemeanor offense, simple Assault,⁶⁴ remained unchanged at thirty days. The next higher offense under the revised Code is the class D felony⁶⁵ offense of Assault While Participating in a Felony,⁶⁶ which carries an indeterminate term of not more than five years. A better approach would have been to make a three-tier level of misdemeanor assaults, rather than the two misdemeanor levels discussed above. Under a three-tier approach, an intermediate assaultive offense requiring an aggravated injury would be added, with an aggravated injury to be defined as an injury other than a "serious injury" which is greater than that which ordinarily results from a simple altercation between parties with the fists or

63. An aggravated misdemeanor is punishable, in the sentencing judge's discretion, by either a determinate or fixed period of confinement for any number of days up to two years or a fine in any amount not exceeding $5,000, or both (confinement and a fine). IOWA CODE § 903.2(1) (1979). All of the ameliorative sentencing alternatives (i.e., a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation) are available in lieu of the prescribed allowable confinement or fine. Id. § 907.3.

64. See IOWA CODE § 708.2(2) (1979) and text accompanying notes 1-18 supra.

65. A class D felony is punishable by confinement for an indeterminate term not to exceed five years and a fine not to exceed $1,000. IOWA CODE § 902.9(4) (1979). If the particular offense is a "forcible felony," then the term of confinement must be imposed and cannot be suspended, and a fine apparently can be imposed only as a supplemental penalty (but cannot be imposed in lieu of mandatory confinement, notwithstanding § 909.1 of the Code). See text accompanying notes 70-102 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980). If the particular offense is not a "forcible felony," then confinement is not mandatory. Indeed, either a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation can be utilized as ameliorative "sentencing" devices in lieu of either confinement or a fine. See IOWA CODE § 907.3 (1979). In addition, a fine clearly can be imposed in lieu of confinement or a suspended sentence. See text accompanying notes 70-102 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980).

the like. Thus, the former offense of Assault With Intent to Inflict Great Bodily Injury would be made into an aggravated battery offense punishable as a serious misdemeanor, with a one-year maximum penalty. An aggravated battery could encompass such conduct as striking another with an object, which extends considerably beyond the mere offensive touchings or threats which commonly constitute simple Assault. The proper offense for breaking someone's nose with one's fists illustrates the dilemma of having no intermediate misdemeanor assault offense. An "overreaching" prosecutor might attempt to stretch such conduct into Assault With Intent to Inflict Serious Injury, whereas what would clearly have been an Assault With Intent to Inflict Great Bodily Injury under the prior law apparently will only be a simple Assault now.

2. Lesser Included Offense

Quite obviously, Assault⁶⁷ is a lesser included offense⁶⁸ of this crime. This is true since the only difference between the two crimes of assaultive conduct is the specific intent to commit a "serious injury" necessary for the greater crime.⁶⁹

D. Assault While Participating in a Felony

The former offenses of Assault With Intent to Commit a Felony,⁷⁰ as well as various Assaults with intent to commit specific felonies,⁷¹ were incorporated into a single crime of Assault While Participating in a Felony.⁷² Unlike its predecessor statute, however, this statute apparently "does not require any connection between the assault and the felony other than that the person committing the assault be at that time participating in a felony."⁷³ Under section 702.14 of the Code, a person is "participating"⁷⁴ in a felony, "whether he is successful or not."⁷⁵

74. See State v. Johnson, 291 N.W.2d 6, 9 (Iowa 1980) which rejected the argument that participation means joint conduct and thus the complicity of two or more persons is not required in committing the crime of Assault While Participating in a Felony.

75. See State v. Johnson, 291 N.W.2d 6, 8 (Iowa 1980) which rejected the claim that the target felony must be completed in order for there to be a conviction for Assault While Participating in a Felony.

during part or the entire period commencing with the first act done directly toward the commission of the offense and for the purpose of committing that offense, and terminating when the person has been arrested or has withdrawn from the scene of the intended crime and has eluded pursuers, if any there be.⁷⁶

Accordingly, this term apparently includes "an attempt to commit the felony, the commission of the felony itself, and the escape from the scene of the felony."⁷⁷ Criminal liability for inchoate criminal conduct vests "[o]nce a felony has progressed to the point where an assault is made."⁷⁸

1. Attempt Liability

This offense should encompass conduct such as a sexual assault when there is lacking a "sex act"⁷⁹ (i.e., neither penetration nor the requisite sexual contact) in order for the crime of Sexual Abuse⁸⁰ to be consummated. That is, attempted Sexual Abuse would be punishable under this offense⁸¹ provided that an assault was actually committed and that the assault occurred coterminous with a felonious intent. An example would be where the defendant has torn off the intended victim's clothing, with the obvious intent to sexually abuse the victim, but for some reason or other is thwarted before making the requisite contact for a "sex act." Of course, the substantive offense of Sexual Abuse would be completed if the attack had progressed to the requisite contact for a "sex act," notwithstanding the lack of the intended penetration, before the defendant was thwarted.

The distinct possibility of certain inchoate criminal activity overlapping in the substantive crime provision and this statute has been recognized by the supreme court. In State v. Pierce,⁸² the court, in upholding the revised offense of Robbery⁸³ against a due process attack, stated that the Robbery statute "is no less clear merely because the conduct proscribed may overlap conduct which is also proscribed under a separate statute,"⁸⁴ referring to an unsuccessful robbery being punishable under either Robbery or Assault While Participating in a Felony.⁸⁵

2. Felony-Assault Doctrine

The scope of this provision apparently is not limited to attempted assaultive conduct. Professor Yeager reports that another intended purpose of this crime is to provide "an additional offense in those cases where the commission of a felony is accompanied by an assault."⁸⁶ Broadly interpreted, under this "felony-assault" doctrine it appears that an otherwise simply assault⁸⁷ can be "bootstrapped" into a felonious assault (specifically a class D felony),⁸⁸ simply because it is committed during participation in any felony, other than a felony, such as Robbery,⁸⁹ that includes an assault as an essential element of the underlying crime itself.⁹⁰ This could result, for example, in a person being charged with Assault While Participating in a Felony in addition to the underlying offense of False Use of a Financial Instrument⁹¹ in a situation in which he offers a forged check, and in the process intentionally pushes aside a suspicious clerk who attempts to restrain him, or points a firearm at the clerk in order to effectuate his escape. The apparent public policy supporting this doctrine is that a simple assault is of a more serious nature when committed in the context of otherwise felonious conduct. Such a severe "bootstrapping" penalty should deter assaultive acts during otherwise non-violent felonious conduct.

3. Grading

This not only is a class D felony,⁹² but is also, more importantly, a "felonious assault"⁹³ and thus a "forcible felony."⁹⁴ Consequently, a person convicted of this offense apparently faces a mandatory prison term.⁹⁵ Application of the so-called "felony-assault" doctrine⁹⁶ (i.e., a simple Assault during the commission or attempted commission of any felony becomes a class

90. The "integral part" doctrine enunciated in People v. Ireland, 75 Cal. Rptr. 188, 450 P.2d 580 (1969), arguably is applicable here by analogy. This doctrine operates as a limitation on the felony murder rule by eliminating assaultive conduct as the basic underlying felony as the unlawful act to bootstrap an unpremeditated murder into first degree murder generally. In Ireland, the court specifically held that it was improper to apply California's second degree felony murder rule to a situation where the claimed felony in the course of which the homicide occurred was an assault with a deadly weapon.

D felony-assault) is especially harsh in these circumstances, but appears to be required. Moreover, the prescribed indeterminate term of five years for Assault While Participating in a Felony would become a fixed five-year term (minus good time⁹⁷ and honor time)⁹⁸ if a firearm is used or possessed during the commission of this crime.⁹⁹ Additionally, any murder committed during this offense would be Murder in the First Degree under the revised felony-murder rule.¹⁰⁰

4. Lesser Included Offenses

The only lesser included offense of this felony crime is Assault,¹⁰¹ a simple misdemeanor.¹⁰² The intermediate related crime of Assault With Intent to Inflict Serious Injury,¹⁰³ an aggravated misdemeanor,¹⁰⁴ is not a lesser included offense under the prevailing Iowa standard. This is because each of the crimes requires an element which the other does not. Assault While Participating in a Felony requires that the requisite assault be committed during the commission or attempted commission of a felony, or that the assault be at an inchoate stage in the completion of a felonious assault (e.g., Sexual Abuse). No such requirement is necessary for an Assault With the Intent to Inflict Serious Injury. On the other hand, the specific intent of the latter offense obviously is not necessarily required for the more severe crime of Assault While Participating in a Felony. That is because, for example, an attempted sexual abuse punishable under Assault While Participating in a Felony does not require a specific intent to inflict "serious injury." The point becomes even stronger when considering application of the so-called "felony-assault" doctrine¹⁰⁵ to Assault While Participating in a Felony.¹⁰⁶ A simple Assault during participation in the commission or attempted commission of the property appropriation felony offense of False Use of a Financial Instrument certainly would not require a specific intent to inflict "serious injury."

E. Willful Injury

The pre-revised common law offense of Mayhem¹⁰⁷ was not only renamed Willful Injury,^{107.1} but was also changed in scope by designating a "serious injury"¹⁰⁸ as the type of injury encompassed by this offense. The scope was broadened as to the type of injury caused to bodily limbs. Limbs no longer need to be "disabled," for now a protracted loss or impairment of function of any bodily organ is sufficient to invoke criminal culpability. On the other hand, Willful Injury now requires a "serious permanent disfigurement" instead of merely permitting the cutting or slitting of certain bodily parts (e.g., tongue, ear, nose, or lip) as was the basis for Mayhem in the predecessor statute.¹⁰⁹

This is a specific intent¹¹⁰ crime, with the required intent being to cause a "serious injury." Of course, this also is a specific result crime, with infliction of a "serious injury" required. Thus, negligent infliction of a "serious injury" is not covered under Willful Injury.¹¹¹ Indeed, this type of conduct is not encompassed by the less serious related crimes of Assault While Participating in a Felony,¹¹² Assault With Intent to Inflict Serious Injury,¹¹³ or even simple Assault.¹¹⁴ This is because an assault (that is, specific intent conduct) is an integral part of each. Hence a civil action is the only legal remedy available.

1. Specific Result Crime

Willful Injury is a specific result crime. Its elements are: (1) doing any unjustified act (i.e., an Assault); (2) intended to cause "serious injury"; (3) which causes "serious injury" to another. So defined, this crime occurs when the lesser crime of Assault With Intent to Inflict a Serious Injury¹¹⁵ is successful.

115. See id. § 708.2(1) and text accompanying notes 56-69 supra.

2. Lesser Included Offenses

Both of the non-felonious classifications of assaultive crimes are lesser included offenses¹¹⁶ of Willful Injury. This is clear in light of the three elements of Willful Injury: (1) assault (2) with intent to inflict "serious injury" and (3) causing "serious injury." The first two elements, standing alone, constitute the aggravated misdemeanor of Assault With Intent to Inflict a Serious Injury,¹¹⁷ whereas the first element, by itself, constitutes the simple misdemeanor offense of Assault.¹¹⁸

3. Grading

The single grade of this felony is a class D felony.¹¹⁹ As a "felonious assault,"¹²⁰ it is also a "forcible felony."¹²¹

4. Felony Murder Rule

As a "forcible felony," this offense can be the underlying basis for Murder in the First Degree under the felony murder rule.¹²² Thus, no change has been effected as the related pre-revised offense of Mayhem applied in such a manner under prior law.¹²³

F. Administering Harmful Substances

A new offense of Administering Harmful Substances¹²⁴ was added to the Code to cover those situations in which a person is unlawfully administered certain harmful substances of such a non-lethal nature or quantity as to not approach Attempted Murder.¹²⁵ Yet, this type of activity is considered too grave to punish merely as simple Assault.¹²⁶ The elements of this offense are: (1) administering to, or causing another to take; (2) substances with certain enumerated harmful effects; (3) in sufficient quantities to cause such harmful effects; (4) and for other than medicinal purposes, (5) without the other person's consent, or by threat or deception.

126. Id. §§ 708.1, .2(2).

1. Grading

The single grade of this offense is a class D felony.¹²⁷ Whether this is a "forcible felony"¹²⁸ is unclear. Because Administering Harmful Substances is not specifically enumerated in the statutory definition of "forcible felony," it must be considered a "felonious assault"¹²⁹ in order to be treated as a "forcible felony." Because of the judicial definition of the term "felonious assault," ("an assault which is a felony"),¹³⁰ this crime will constitute a "forcible felony" only if the statute defining this offense is interpreted such that an assault is necessarily included (required) within its essential elements. Nowhere on the face of that statute is there any requirement of a specific intent, unlike Assault.¹³¹ Such omission suggests that Administering Harmful Substances is not a "felonious assault" and thus not a "forcible felony." While this probably was not the legislative intent, it is nevertheless the legislative result. This conclusion is buttressed by the canon of construction of strict construction of penal statutes.¹³² Moreover, the Iowa Supreme Court in *Emery v. Fenton*¹³³ has stated specifically in regard to the new Criminal Code that: [c]hanges made by revision of a statute will not be construed as altering the law unless the legislature's intent to accomplish a change in its meaning is clear and unmistakable. An intent to make a change does not exist when the revised statute is merely susceptible to two constructions.¹³⁴

The Emery v. Fenton limitation should apply to determining whether Administering Harmful Substances is a "forcible felony," especially since this is a new crime which was not included in the former Criminal Code. Instead, this type of conduct would have been punishable under the pre-revised less severe offenses either as Assault¹³⁵ or as Assault With Intent to Inflict Great Bodily Injury.¹³⁶

The one apparent argument that Administering Harmful Substances may be a specific intent crime is that the actus reus must have been done

127. See note 65 supra.

128. A "forcible felony" is not subject to any of the ameliorative sentencing alternatives (i.e., a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation). See IOWA CODE § 907.3 (1979). Thus, confinement is mandatory. Moreover, it appears that IOWA CODE § 909.1 does not permit a fine as the sole sentencing alternative for a "forcible felony." See text accompanying notes 92-102 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980). Moreover, being a "forcible felony," this offense is also subject to the mandatory minimum five-year sentence if a firearm is used or possessed during its commission.

"for other than medicinal purposes."¹³⁷ This could suggest that there is thus an implied intent to injure whenever such harmful substances are non-consensually administered without a medicinal purpose. However, this offense can be committed by a person who does not harbor any intention to injure. Moreover, since knowledge of the harmful effects of these substances is not required, how can there be an implied intent to injure? The bottom line, of course, is that the statute does not impose a requirement that the prosecution prove beyond a reasonable doubt as an essential element that the defendant committed the proscribed act with the intent to injure. Rather, all that the prosecutor has to do under the statute is, in effect, to disprove that the act was motivated by medicinal concerns.¹³⁸ Once this has been accomplished, the prosecutor does not need to prove precisely why the proscribed act was committed.

2. Lesser Included Offenses

Assuming that an Assault is not required for this crime, there are no lesser included offenses¹³⁹ of Administering Harmful Substances.

3. Felony Murder Rule

Assuming that this is not a "forcible felony,"¹⁴⁰ as discussed above, Administering Harmful Substances cannot qualify as an underlying felony under the first-degree felony murder rule.¹⁴¹ This means that any death caused by this type of criminal activity will have to be prosecuted either under the second-degree felony murder rule¹⁴² or under the applicable homicide offense.¹⁴³ The key point is that the felony murder rule would be inapplicable in making any wrongful death into Murder in the First Degree, absent premeditation.¹⁴⁴

G. Terrorism

The gravamen of the restructured crime of Terrorism¹⁴⁵ is the specific intent¹⁴⁶ "to injure or provoke fear or anger in another."¹⁴⁷ This offense can be committed in either of two ways, the first being: (1) discharging a "dangerous weapon";¹⁴⁸ (2) at or into any occupied building or vehicle, and (3) placing the occupants thereof in reasonable apprehension¹⁴⁹ of "serious injury."¹⁵⁰ Proof of the occupant's being placed in actual danger appears unnecessary in light of the fact that the crime only requires that the dangerous weapon be discharged at an occupied building or vehicle.

The second way that this crime can be committed is by: (1) threatening (2) to commit a "forcible felony,"¹⁵¹ with (3) reasonable expectation of the threat being carried out.¹⁵² So defined, this threat (to commit a "forcible felony") is more seriously punished than a simple Assault.¹⁵³

1. Grading

Indeed, Terrorism is a class D felony.¹⁵⁴ More importantly, the first of the two types mentioned above has been held to be¹⁵⁵ a "forcible felony"¹⁵⁶ under the interpretation of a "felonious assault."¹⁵⁷ Of course, an Assault¹⁵⁸ must be a necessary part of Terrorism, in order for Terrorism to be considered a "felonious assault." However, as to the second alternative type of terrorism, this test appears not to be met in light of the overt act requirements of an Assault.¹⁵⁹ The latter offense heretofore has not been complete on the mere speaking of words (albeit threatening words).

2. Felony Murder Rule

If, as suggested above, Terrorism is a "forcible felony," then a murder occurring during an act of Terrorism will constitute Murder in the First Degree under the felony murder rule.¹⁶⁰ Otherwise, an intentional, but unpremeditated, murder would only constitute Murder in the Second Degree,¹⁶¹

whereas an unintentional killing would be punishable merely as Involuntary Manslaughter.¹⁶²

3. Lesser Included Offense

Assuming, as discussed above, that an assault is not an essential element of Terrorism, there would be no lesser included offenses¹⁶³ in a prosecution for Terrorism. On the other hand, if it is determined that an assault necessarily is included in Terrorism, then of course Assault¹⁶⁴ would be a lesser included offense. However, the aggravated misdemeanor offense of Assault With Intent to Inflict a Serious Injury¹⁶⁵ would still not be a lesser included offense of Terrorism since Terrorism does not require a specific intent to cause a "serious injury," but instead requires an intent merely to "injure" or, alternatively, to "provoke fear or anger" in another.

H. Harrassment

The gravamen of the new crime of Harrassment,¹⁶⁶ which has been characterized as consisting of "an assortment of petty annoyances,"¹⁶⁷ is the specific intent¹⁶⁸ "to intimidate, annoy or alarm another person."¹⁶⁹ No particular harm need result, however, for this crime to occur.

This single-grade simple misdemeanor offense¹⁷⁰ can be committed in any of four ways. Harrassment by annoying communications (e.g., by telephone) requires a showing of a lack of a legitimate purpose on the part of the person making such communications.¹⁷¹ Harrassment by the placing of a simulated bomb in or near any occupied building or vehicle could criminalize activities involving only practical joking devices such as smoke or whistle bombs.¹⁷² Harrassment by falsely ordering merchandise in another's name must be shown to have been done without the harassed person's knowledge or consent.¹⁷³ Harrassment can also be committed by knowingly¹⁷⁴ and falsely accusing another of criminal activity, either when no crime has occurred or when the accused did not commit it.¹⁷⁵ This latter type of conduct also constitutes the crime of Making False Reports to Law Enforcement Authorities.¹⁷⁶

The Oregon Supreme Court¹⁷⁷ has declared unconstitutional a Harassment statute strikingly similar to section 708.7(1),¹⁷⁸ which criminalizes annoying communications without legitimate purpose. The gravamen of the Oregon offense was considered to be that the offender communicated rather than that he subjected the victim to some defined injury. Finally, the proscribed communication need not cause any harm, and only needs to have been "likely" to do so—whether defendant was aware of this likelihood or not.

I. Going Armed with Intent

The only change made in the crime of Going Armed with Intent¹⁷⁹ was to substitute the general terminology of "any dangerous weapon"¹⁸⁰ for the pre-revised lengthy listing of specific weapons. The practical effect could be to include more weapons within the province of this offense.¹⁸¹

Specifically, this crime consists of: (1) going armed¹⁸² (2) with a "dangerous weapon,"¹⁸³ (3) with the intent to use it, without justification, against another person. This is a specific intent crime, thus differentiating it from the crime of Carrying Weapons,¹⁸⁴ although the prosecution does not have to prove the particular person against whom the defendant intended to use the

181. However, this expanded definition still is not broad enough to encompass a starting pistol. See State v. Lawr, 263 N.W.2d 747 (Iowa 1978).

182. "Going armed" encompasses conscious and deliberate keeping of a dangerous weapon on or about the person, and available for immediate use. See UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 821. The distance that an armed individual has gone from his home is relevant upon the element of intent in appropriate cases. This is a matter for the jury, rather than a question of sufficiency of evidence (for a motion for judgment of acquittal). State v. Buchanan, 207 N.W.2d 784 (Iowa 1973).

183. Under the UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 820, the jury is to decide if the particular weapon used by the defendant was a "dangerous weapon," as that term is defined in UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 218.

184. IOWA CODE § 724.4 (1979).

dangerous weapon.¹⁸⁵

1. Non-Assault

Although this crime is included in the chapter on Assaults, an assault clearly is not an element of this crime. Going Armed with Intent is essentially an inchoate attempted murder provision, applicable in a situation where there is not a sufficient overt act for an Attempted Murder charge.¹⁸⁶ Indeed, the crime of Going Armed with Intent "is complete without any attempt having been made to use the weapon."¹⁸⁷

2. Grading

This is a class D felony.¹⁸⁸ Significantly, however, it is not a "forcible felony."¹⁸⁹ This is because an assault is not a necessary element and thus Going Armed With Intent would not come within the interpretation of a felonious assault in State v. Powers.¹⁹⁰ Because it is not a "forcible felony," this offense is not subject to the five-year mandatory¹⁹¹ minimum sentence for possession or use of firearms,¹⁹² and is not an underlying felony for application of the felony murder rule to Murder in the First Degree.¹⁹³

J. Setting Spring Guns and Mantraps

A new crime of Setting Spring Guns and Mantraps¹⁹⁴ appears in section 708.9 of the Code, partly in response¹⁹⁵ to the well-publicized and highly controversial civil liability case of Katko v. Briney.¹⁹⁶ The elements of this offense are: (1) setting either a spring gun or mantrap (2) which is intended to be sprung by a person, and (3) which can cause such person "serious injury."¹⁹⁷

195. Professor Yeager, the draftsman of the Iowa Criminal Code, reports that this provision was already included in early drafts of the proposed revised Code prior to the decision in Katko v. Briney, 183 N.W.2d 657 (Iowa 1971). See J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 188.

The single grade of this offense is an aggravated misdemeanor,¹⁹⁸ irrespective of whether or not the spring gun or mantrap is ever set off. Unlike several other offenses, this crime does not include a built-in higher penalty schedule for firing of the devices or for any resultant personal injury. This singular approach has the desirable effect of avoiding double punishment for any personal injury caused by a spring gun or a mantrap. Of course, any resultant harm caused to a person would be punishable as a separate substantive offense, either as a homicide offense or an aggravated type of assault offense, depending upon the degree of injury and the particular surrounding circumstances.

II. SEXUAL ABUSE AND RELATED SEXUAL MORALITY OFFENSES

A. Overview

Unauthorized sexual activity and conduct involving proscribed sexual morality constitute thirteen offenses in the new Criminal Code. Five of these are new crimes. These include three new obscenity offenses (Sale of Hard Core Pornography,¹⁹⁹ Public Indecent Exposure,²⁰⁰ and Sexual Exploitation of Children),²⁰¹ the prostitution-related offense of Pimping,²⁰² and the "visual assault" offense of Indecent Exposure.²⁰³ The latter offense had not been punishable in Iowa since the pre-revised statute was declared unconstitutional in 1974.²⁰⁴

Major revisions were made in all of the pre-existing crimes, except for Detention in a Brothel.²⁰⁵ The only minor change made in this obscure offense was to extend the coverage of involuntary prostitution in a brothel to males, instead of limiting it solely to females.

1. "Sex Act"

Only one of the revised "sex" crimes—Incest²⁰⁶—requires sexual intercourse as an element of the offense. The newly-styled offense of Sexual Abuse²⁰⁷ (which replaces the pre-revised offenses of Rape,²⁰⁸ Statutory Rape,²⁰⁹ and Carnal Knowledge of an Imbecile,²¹⁰ as well as recriminalizes nonconsensual Sodomy)²¹¹ no longer requires sexual intercourse. The actus reus—a “sex act”²¹²—of the new offense can be committed also merely by making unlawful sexual contact instead of penetration. Similarly, application of the general term “sex act” to Prostitution²¹³ (and its related offenses) has also broadened the scope of that offense, which previously had been limited to “commercial” sexual intercourse.²¹⁴

Although neither a “sex act” nor actual sexual intercourse is required for any of the other sex-related crimes, nevertheless a “sex act” is, or can be, an integral part of these offenses. Solicitation of a “child”²¹⁵ to commit a “sex act” is one of the proscribed activities punishable as Lascivious Acts With a Child.²¹⁶ Committing a “sex act” in the view of a third person is one of the two alternative ways to commit the offense of Indecent Exposure.²¹⁷ Finally, the five obscenity offenses include specialized definitions of “sex act” in their exhaustive enumerations of what constitutes obscene or pornographic material.²¹⁸

2. Special Protections of Children or Adolescents

A major focus of attention in this series of sexual-related crimes is upon protection of children. No less than three different cut-off ages²¹⁹ for defining children (i.e., under eighteen, under fourteen, and under twelve) are used in the various offenses, however, with no apparent reason. The most serious of these offenses is statutory sexual abuse²²⁰ of a “child”²²¹ either by sexual intercourse or by mere sexual contact. The most significant change was that the age of “consent” for purposes of statutory sexual abuse was lowered as part of the Criminal Code revision from sixteen to fourteen. Moreover, a higher penalty schedule, indeed a class B felony,²²² attaches

when the youthful victim is under twelve.²²³

Sexual intercourse between an adult and an adolescent (defined here as a "minor" who nevertheless is not a "child," i.e., either fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, or seventeen years old) thus is not criminal except for limited special circumstances. One of these is a familial relationship, and thus sexual intercourse between a parent and a "child" (or a stepparent and a "stepchild") would be punishable as Incest.²²⁴

Certain (but not all) sexual activity with children stopping short of "sexual contact"²²⁵ is punishable nevertheless as Lascivious Acts With a Child.²²⁶ The cut-off age for a "child" was lowered from sixteen to fourteen. Strangely, the offender must be eighteen or over, which makes this the only crime which cannot be committed by fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen year old persons.

A new obscenity crime—Sexual Exploitation of a Child²²⁷—focuses upon exploiting "child" models for pornographic materials. The upper age limit for a "child" is fourteen. Contrastingly, two other obscenity offenses regulating access to obscene materials relate to "minors" (i.e., under eighteen) instead of merely to "children" (i.e., under fourteen).²²⁸ This has the anomalous result that fourteen to seventeen year old youngsters can legally be exploited as models for "child" pornography yet are "protected" against gaining access to obscene materials.

3. Sexual Privacy

Sexual privacy is recognized only to a limited degree in the new Criminal Code. The crimes of Adultery²²⁹ and Seduction²³⁰ were eliminated, and consensual sodomitc acts between adults were not re-criminalized. Nevertheless, Prostitution²³¹ was not only retained as a crime but also was expanded by changing the crux of the offense from sexual intercourse to mere sexual contacts.

B. Sexual Abuse

1. Circumstances Making Sexual Contact Illegal

The gist of the newly-styled crime of Sexual Abuse²³² is unwarranted sexual contact. Generically, the elements of this offense are: (1) a "sex act"²³³ (2) between two or more persons (3) either non-consensually by force²³⁴ or against the will²³⁵ of the other participant or consensually with certain types of other participants considered particularly vulnerable under the sexual abuse law. These special circumstances or characteristics of the other participant include: (a) being mentally defective;²³⁶ (b) lacking "the mental capacity to know the right and wrong of conduct in sexual matters";²³⁷ (c) being a "child"²³⁸ (i.e., under fourteen); (d) being fourteen or fifteen and a member of the same household as the defendant;²³⁹ (e) being fourteen or fifteen and related to the defendant by blood or marriage to the fourth degree;²⁴⁰ (f) being fourteen or fifteen and being psychologically "coerced" into submission through the defendant's use of a position of authority;²⁴¹ and (g) being fourteen or fifteen and sexually participating, whether voluntarily or not, with a defendant who is at least six years older.²⁴²

2. Actus Reus

A "sex act"²⁴³ is conclusively defined in explicit detail in a general definitional clause, as either penetration or sexual contact with certain enumerated body parts. This broad definition thus represents a major change in this area of the criminal law by eliminating penetration as a required element and by combining several pre-revised offenses.²⁴⁴

3. Mental State

Like its principal predecessor crime of Rape,²⁴⁵ Sexual Abuse is not a specific intent crime. All that is required is that the proscribed "sex act"²⁴⁶ be performed either (1) by force or against the will of any person, (2) with a mentally-handicapped person, or (3) with persons under sixteen under various circumstances.²⁴⁷ Thus, a specific intent to gratify sexual passions is not an element of the crime. Rather, as under the pre-revised crime of Rape, the only mental state required is a general criminal intent²⁴⁸ which is supplied by the unauthorized act of sexual contact.²⁴⁹

4. Special Age Circumstances

As discussed above,²⁵⁰ the revised crime of Sexual Abuse obviously provides special protection for children. Statutory sexual abuse in some instances also involves consideration of the age of the offender. The four different situations involving age considerations of one or both parties are as follows. A "sex act" between an offender who is six or more years older than the victim constitutes Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree²⁵¹ if the victim is either fourteen or fifteen. If, however, the victim is fourteen or fifteen but the offender is less than six years older, then the crime of statutory Sexual Abuse does not occur.

No considerations of a special minimal age of the offender are present, however, when the victim is a "child." Thus, an offender who is of the minimal general criminal responsibility age of fourteen²⁵² can be prosecuted ultimately for sexual abuse involving a "victim" who is only one year younger (i.e., thirteen). The particular age of the victim is important for grading purposes: Sexual Abuse in the Third (or lowest) Degree²⁵³ occurs with a victim who is either twelve or thirteen, whereas Sexual Abuse in the (higher) Second Degree²⁵⁴ occurs if the victim is only eleven or younger.

254. Id. § 709.3(2).

The principle under the pre-revised law²⁵⁶ that mistake as to a child's age, albeit a reasonable mistake, was no defense to a charge of statutory rape is unchanged as to a new Code charge of Sexual Abuse with a Child. As explained in the Bar's Uniform Jury Instructions: "Lack of knowledge on the part of the person as to the actual age of the child would not be a defense to the crime charged. Likewise, it would be immaterial whether the person, at the time of such sex act, if any, may have believed the child was 14 [sic] years of age or older."²⁵⁶

5. Spousal Immunity

One of the most intriguing questions under the new Iowa Criminal Code is whether or not a husband can be convicted of sexual abuse of his wife (or theoretically, vice versa). No clear answer is apparent on the face of the statute²⁵⁷ in light of shoddy draftsmanship and an obvious political compromise. Application of standard canons of statutory construction results in a literal stand-off. The bottom line, thus, is that the determining factor should be the apparent legislative purpose, coupled with a public policy stressing modern concepts of justice and sanctity of the individual instead of remaining shackled to anachronistic sexual stereotypes of an age long gone by.

Although the usual starting point in analyzing the meaning of a statute is the statute itself, nevertheless in this instance, it is necessary to start with the common law. This is because at common law a husband could not be convicted for raping his wife.²⁵⁸ Various rationales for this short sighted doctrine have been expounded, one of the more fundamental (albeit incredible) being that a wife was the property of the husband apparently to do with as he pleased, with or without her consent.²⁵⁹ Consequently, a wife was not considered to be a person within the protection of the early rape laws.

The general approach in other jurisdictions has been that a rape statute

259. See, e.g., State v. Smith, 148 N.J. Super. 219, 372 A.2d 386, 388 (1977), quoting Sir Matthew Hale, to wit:

But the husband cannot be guilty of a rape committed by himself upon his lawful wife, for by their mutual matrimonial consent and contract, the wife hath given up herself in this kind unto her husband, which she cannot retract. [1 Hale, Pleas of the Crown 629 (1847)].

Perkins agrees, but argues that a more "modern" rationale would be that spousal rape does not meet the requisite of unlawful sexual intercourse, since sexual intercourse between spouses obviously is authorized by law. R. PERKINS, supra note 12, at 156.

must expressly include husbands within its coverage (e.g., "Rape is having carnal knowledge of a female, including one's wife, without her consent").²⁶⁰ Absent such statutory enlargement, generally worded rape statutes have been held to not include a husband's non-consensual sexual attack on his wife.²⁶¹

This question was never decided by the Iowa Supreme Court under the pre-revised law. The only reference, although tangential at best, to this matter was made in State v. Morrison.²⁶² The following jury instruction defining rape was given by the trial court, without pertinent comment, in the opinion in Morrison: "Rape is the act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator, when she resists" ²⁶³

The central question then is whether the revised sexual abuse statute contains sufficient statutory enlargement to include husband-wife rapes. The only applicable mention is in section 709.4 which states that "[a]ny sex act between persons who are not at the time cohabiting as husband and wife is sexual abuse in the third degree by a person when the act is performed with the other participant in any of the following circumstances" ²⁶⁴ This matter is not addressed in the definition of the generic offense itself in section 709.1.

An interesting twist is that section 709.1 as originally introduced in 1975 defined sexual abuse as "[a]ny sex act between persons who are not husband and wife, or between a husband and wife who are not at the time cohabiting as husband and wife, is sexual abuse by either of the participants when he performs the act with the other participant in any of the following circumstances" ²⁶⁵ The italicized language was stricken by a conference committee. The import of this deletion²⁶⁶ is that the legislative intent certainly was not to exclude husband-wife rapes. The interpretational problem, however, is that the additional italicized phrase merely would have codified the existing common law. So viewed, the practical effect of deleting the proposed additional phrase would be meaningless in light of the common law.

The General Assembly is presumed to know the state of the law, including the common law, at the time that it passes legislation.²⁶⁷ Accordingly, legislative failure to change the common law leaves the common law principle in effect. Here, however, there is a strong indication that the General Assembly was not aware of the existing state of the law. Otherwise, why was the obvious stated in the italicized phrase set out above? A reasonable interpretation is that the legislative intent in subsequently deleting this phrase was to eliminate spousal immunity rather than merely to "tidy up" the terminology by eliminating surplus words. This deletion in section 709.1 was coupled with an amendment adding the co-habiting spousal immunity clause in section 709.4 which subsequently was passed.

The apparent legislative intent not to exclude spouses from the sexual abuse statutes becomes more clear when sections 709.1-4 are read, in pari materia, with sections 709.8-9 which define the related offenses of Lascivious Acts With a Child²⁶⁸ and Indecent Exposure,²⁶⁹ respectively. Complete spousal immunity is expressly included on the face of each of the latter two statutes. Thus, in S.F. 85, in its original form as introduced in 1975, complete spousal immunity was expressly included in all three of the related sexual activity offenses.²⁷⁰ By subsequently eliminating the spousal immunity only as to the offense of Sexual Abuse, the General Assembly clearly intended to make husbands responsible for forcible rape (except for the corresponding limitation set out in section 709.4).

Another key point in resolving this question is that the general common law presumption of strict construction of statutes in derogation of common law has been expressly abolished by statute in Iowa.²⁷¹ Additionally, section 4.3 of the Code provides that Code provisions "shall be liberally construed with a view to promote [the Code's] objects and assist the parties in obtaining justice." These dual statutory provisions aid considerably in resolving the matter squarely upon legislative intent rather than hypertechnically on the actual legislative result because of shoddy draftsmanship. After all, a simple additional phrase in section 709.1, ("Any sex act between persons, including husband and wife, is sexual abuse . . .") would have left no doubt.

With this legislative history and the underlying philosophical approach in mind, the following interpretation of this statute appears to be correct. A husband, whether or not co-habiting with his wife at the time, can commit Sexual Abuse in either the First or Second Degree on his wife; but only a husband who is not co-habiting can commit Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree on his wife. Thus, a non-cohabiting husband can be convicted of Sexual Abuse in any of the three degrees, just as if he no longer were married to his victim, whereas a co-habiting husband can only be convicted of Sexual Abuse of his wife in the First or Second Degrees (i.e., when he does other aggravating acts than the mere forced "sex act").

The other possible statutory interpretation is that while a husband can never be convicted of Sexual Abuse in the First or Second Degrees, whether he is co-habiting with his wife at the time or not, nevertheless he can commit Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree, but only if he is not co-habiting. Thus, a husband who is co-habiting with his wife at the time of the forced sexual assault can never be convicted of any degree of Sexual Abuse and a non-cohabiting husband can only be convicted of the lowest degree of Sexual Abuse even though he has committed aggravating acts (e.g., caused "serious injury") otherwise sufficient for Sexual Abuse of a higher degree.²⁷²

The second alternative certainly does not make sense from a public policy standpoint. It would be ridiculous for the General Assembly to include a non-cohabiting husband within the rubric of the lowest degree of Sexual Abuse, but then immunize him from the two higher degrees. The fundamental change occurred with including husbands, whether co-habiting or not with their wives-victims, at all. Once that legislative hurdle was crossed, it is unreasonable to believe that the legislature intended not to hold a non-cohabiting husband also responsible for First or Second Degree Sexual Abuse.

Several canons of statutory construction militate somewhat against the foregoing conclusion. Nevertheless, their consideration should not change the ultimate result. First and foremost, penal statutes are to be construed strictly, with doubts resolved against the state.²⁷³ Nevertheless, the obvious legislative intent should not be thwarted by giving strict adherence to this principle,²⁷⁴ in light of clear evidence that the legislature thought it had not established spousal immunity (except as to the limited circumstances discussed above).

Secondly, because this revised statute purports to make a major change in the prior law (here, especially a principle of long standing) *Emery v. Fenton*²⁷⁵ comes into play. In Emery, the supreme court characterized the new Criminal Code as "primarily a restatement" of prior law,²⁷⁶ and accordingly, at least indirectly, established a presumption of non-change. Accordingly, the following interpretational approach is used. "Changes made by revision of a statute will not be construed as altering the law unless the legislature's intent to accomplish a change in its meaning is clear and unmistakable. An intent to make a change does not exist when the revised statute is merely susceptible to two constructions."²⁷⁷ Here, however, the legislature's intent to change the law was clear, as evidenced by the legislative history of the sexual abuse provisions as well as legislative action on related offenses.

Finally, even the statutory organization of the sexual abuse statutes may be important. Recall that the only mention of spousal immunity is in section 709.4 granting immunity to a charge of Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree for a cohabiting husband. If the sole basis for interpreting sections 709.2 and 709.3 to include cohabiting husbands within their coverage were that these two sections do not include comparable provisions, then Emery v. Fenton is applicable in another way. In Emery, the supreme court held that the pre-revised law denying bail in post-conviction relief proceedings was left unchanged in the revision process despite new Code section 811.1, which provides: "All defendants are bailable both before and after conviction, . . . except that a defendant convicted of a class 'A' felony shall not be admitted to bail while appealing such conviction [or seeking post-conviction relief]."²⁷⁸

Rejecting the petitioner's claim that this provision had the effect of authorizing bail for class B, C, or D felons in post-conviction proceedings, the court said that "[i]t is unreasonable to believe that the legislature would impliedly create an affirmative right in one group of persons solely by language expressly denying the right to another group."²⁷⁹ The flip-flop of that principle may be that criminal liability can not be created passively or impliedly in some circumstances solely by an affirmative exemption clause covering other circumstances.

Even if this is a viable extension of Emery, nevertheless the legislative intent is clear that the amended section 709.1 provision included husbands, especially since a contrary provision was stricken. So viewed, then sections 709.1-.3 affirmatively place criminal liability upon husbands, leaving section 709.4 as a mere exceptions clause.

Moreover, a New Jersey inferior court held²⁸⁰ in 1977 that a husband could not be convicted of raping his wife under a statute²⁸¹ (similar to Iowa's pre-revised rape statute)²⁸² which was determined to be essentially declaratory of the common law offense.²⁸³ That court examined the common law principles in detail²⁸⁴ and correctly concluded that a husband was exempted at common law.²⁸⁵ Invoking the principle of statutory interpretation that "if a change in the common law is to be effected by statute, legislative intent to accomplish the change must be clearly and plainly expressed,"²⁸⁶ the court determined that there was no statutory enlargement of the common law offense. Additionally, the court recognized the general principle of strict construction of statutes in derogation of common law, as well as that of strict construction of a penal statute "lest it be applied to persons or conduct beyond the [l]egislature's contemplation."²⁸⁷ So construed, the court considered it immaterial that the statute referred to "carnal knowledge of a woman forcibly against her will,"²⁸⁸ without specifically excluding a wife-victim from its proscription. Because of the common law background, the court intimated that the statute would have had to affirmatively include a spouse in order for it to apply to forcible sexual intercourse with a spouse.

This left one remaining perplexing question, to wit: "whether this court has the authority, power, or indeed the right to denounce and depart from existing law and, by [judicial] mandate, change it?"²⁸⁹ Although making its feelings clear that it rejected both the traditional rationale and supportive policy arguments for husband immunity, the court nevertheless concluded that it "[lacked] the authority to simply ignore the settled principles of law that bind us and depart from the common law rule because, in our judgment, it is unfair and discriminatory, and thus create, with a sweep of the pen, criminal responsibility where none has heretofore existed."²⁹⁰

Iowa's new Sexual Abuse statute is distinguishable from New Jersey's Rape statute, although Iowa's pre-revised Rape statute was not. As detailed above, the Iowa legislature manifested its intent to abolish spousal immunity, unlike the New Jersey legislature. The bottom line, of course, is that the Iowa statute does expressly refer, albeitly inartfully, to spousal abuse, unlike New Jersey's statute. The exact extent of the spousal coverage in Iowa's Sexual Abuse statute is not entirely clear on the face of the statute itself, but (again as detailed above) it becomes sufficiently clear upon being analyzed according to the accepted standards of statutory construction. One significant difference between Iowa and New Jersey law in reaching the ultimate conclusion is that Iowa has statutorily abolished the general (or common law) presumption of strict construction of statutes in derogation of common law. Indeed, section 4.2 of the Iowa Code mandates instead that a statutory provision "shall be liberally construed with a view to promote its objects and assist the parties in obtaining justice."²⁹¹

In conclusion, the logical interpretation of the sexual abuse provisions is that a husband no longer enjoys statutory immunity for raping his wife, except for the one limited circumstance enumerated in section 709.4. That is, a husband has immunity from a charge of Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree for an act of forced sexual intercourse with an unwilling wife with whom he is presently cohabiting. A non-cohabiting (or estranged) husband does not enjoy such immunity by express language of the statute itself. On the other hand, even a cohabiting husband—like a non-cohabiting husband—does not enjoy immunity from Sexual Abuse of his wife in either the First or Second Degrees, in light of there being no accompanying immunity provisions in the corresponding sections 709.2 and 709.3.

The net effect is to immunize a cohabiting husband from prosecution for a "sex act" by force with his wife, while criminalizing a cohabiting husband's nonconsensual "sex acts" that are accompanied by severe aggravating circumstances. Moreover, complete protection from an estranged husband is afforded. This hybrid approach appears on balance to have been the result of political compromise between proponents of the total spousal immunity approach in the original bill and proponents of a total criminalization approach.

The legislative judgment in immunizing a husband under any circumstances is open to question. After all, spousal immunity is not recognized in other violent crimes, and sexual violence should not be treated any differently.

6. Felony Murder Rule

The consolidation of many pre-revised offenses into the new crime of Sexual Abuse has the effect of broadening the scope of the application of the felony murder rule for Murder in the First Degree.²⁹² Only Rape (which included Statutory Rape) in this category of offenses was included as an underlying felony for this purpose under the pre-revised law.²⁹³

7. Attempted Sexual Abuse

Unlike the pre-revised Rape law,²⁹⁴ an attempted act of sexual abuse is included within the definition of the consummated offense of Sexual Abuse itself—provided that there is the requisite sexual contact. This would seem to require actual physical touching of bare genitalia, as, for example, intertwining of pubic hair.²⁹⁵ Of course, the contact can be made via an artificial or substitute sexual organ.²⁹⁶

The crime of Sexual Abuse thus does not entirely encompass attempted sexual abuse within its definition. Although a “sex act”²⁹⁷ does not require penetration, nevertheless “sexual contact” is required. To the extent that there is proof of such contact, the “attempt” is punishable identically to the consummated act. This, however, requires dangerous proximity to success.

Absent the requisite “sexual contact,” the act of attempted sexual abuse is only punishable under the general, less-serious crime of Assault While Participating in a Felony.²⁹⁸ This inchoate crime nevertheless requires an Assault.²⁹⁹ The requisite assault can occur at any time from the preparatory stage to the escape stage,³⁰⁰ however, but must be coterminous with the requisite specific intent to commit Sexual Abuse.³⁰¹

This crime is the successor to the pre-revised offense of Assault With Intent to Commit a Felony.³⁰² Unfortunately, there is no specific attempted sexual abuse crime similar to the pre-revised crime of Assault With Intent to Commit Rape.³⁰³ The result is that the maximum penalty for this type of conduct was reduced from twenty years, whether there was any collateral injury or not, under the pre-revised law to either ten years or five years depending upon whether any “serious injury”³⁰⁴ was caused under the new Criminal Code.³⁰⁵ A contrasting statutory change, however, has eliminated the availability under the pre-revised law of ameliorative sentencing alternatives,³⁰⁶ and confinement may be mandatory under the new Iowa Code.³⁰⁷

8. Incest Contrasted

One form of Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree can also constitute Incest:³⁰⁸ viz. a "sex act,"³⁰⁹ consisting of actual intercourse, with a participant who is either 14 or 15 years old and related to the defendant by blood or by marriage to the fourth degree. Like all forms of Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree,³¹⁰ this is a class C felony³¹¹ and even more importantly is classified as a "forcible felony."³¹²

Incest, on the other hand, is only a class D felony³¹³ and quite significantly is not a "forcible felony."³¹⁴ Yet, Incest covers the same situation as part of a broader spectrum of criminalizing sexual intercourse between certain known relatives without any age restrictions as to the other participant. This apparently means that the legislature intended that an incestuous party (or parties) is to be punished more harshly for having a comparatively young (i.e., fifteen or sixteen) partner than for other older (i.e., seventeen and up) partners. In effect, this new twist creates a hybrid statutory sexual abuse-incest offense.

311. A class C felony is punishable by confinement for an indeterminate term not to exceed ten years and a fine not to exceed $5,000. IOWA CODE § 902.9(3) (1979). If the particular offense is a "forcible felony," then the term of confinement must be imposed and cannot be suspended, and a fine apparently can be imposed only as a supplemental penalty (but cannot be imposed in lieu of mandatory confinement, notwithstanding § 909.1 of the Code). See text accompanying notes 70-102 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980). If the particular offense is not a "forcible felony," then confinement is not mandatory. Indeed, either a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation can be utilized as ameliorative "sentencing" devices in lieu of either confinement or a fine. See IOWA CODE § 907.3 (1979). In addition, a fine clearly can be imposed in lieu of confinement or a suspended sentence. See text accompanying notes 75-102 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. of another person is caused.³¹⁷ This refers to a collateral injury separate and apart from the pain of the forced "sex act" itself, although this does not require any separate act of violence. The general definition of "serious injury" encompasses disabling mental illness³¹⁸ that might accompany an especially brutal sexual assault or an attack on an especially mentally vulnerable person. How protracted the disablement period must be is left to judicial interpretation. That it need not be permanent is clear by reading, in pari materia, the accompanying phrase making serious permanent disfigurement³¹⁹ another type of "serious injury." Moreover, the "serious injury" apparently can be suffered by any person, as long as it occurs "in the course of committing sexual abuse."³²⁰ An example of this could be a female victim's baby being seriously injured during the res gestae of the sexual abuse of the mother.

Pregnancy, by itself, does not appear to constitute "serious injury," as that term is restrictively defined in the Criminal Code.³²¹ Absent extraordinary aggravating circumstances, pregnancy of a sexual abuse victim would neither: (1) create "a substantial risk of death,"³²² (2) cause "serious permanent disfigurement,"³²³ (3) cause a "disabling mental illness,"³²⁴ or (4) cause "protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ."³²⁵

Four aggravating circumstances render a sexual abuse to be in the Second Degree,³²⁶ a class B felony.³²⁷ Two closely-related circumstances involve

This compares to the four specific components of "serious injury" in Iowa's restrictive code section 702.18. Cf. People v. Caudillo, 21 Cal. 3d 562, 580 P.2d 274, 146 Cal. violence or threatened violence: (1) displaying a "deadly weapon"³²⁸ in a threatening manner and (2) using or threatening to use force creating a substantial risk of death or "serious injury" to the victim or another person (e.g., threatening to harm the victim's infant unless the mother-victim cooperated). Equating use of serious force with mere threats to use serious force is inexplicable, and seems out of line with the general scheme of the new Criminal Code in focusing upon actual harm done. Moreover, the inclusion of threatened "serious injury" just about pre-empts the field, leaving little for the residual category of Sexual Abuse in the Second Degree.

A third aggravating circumstance occurs when the defendant is aided or abetted by one or more persons. This is based upon greater harm to, and greater fear by the victim, with a lesser chance for escape. However, the grading would be more meaningful if the standard were two or more assailants. A prolonged gang attack definitely should be more harshly punished than an ordinary one-on-one, but should a single assailant and his lookout also ipso facto be subjected to very harsh penalties (i.e., an indeterminate sentence of twenty five years as opposed to ten years for an ordinary Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree).

A fourth aggravating circumstance occurs when the victim is under twelve. On the other hand, if the victim of a statutory sexual abuse is either twelve or thirteen, then the crime is only Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree.³²⁹ Presumably, the legislative concern was that the younger the child the higher the risk of physical or emotional injury.³³⁰

Sexual Abuse in the Third (or lowest) Degree³³¹ is a residual provision covering unlawful sexual contact without the presence of any of the aggravating circumstances enumerated above. That is, this offense includes an ordinary rape of a nonconsenting adult, in addition to "sexual contact" with or without the consent of a person lacking in mental capacity, or with a "child," or with an adolescent of fourteen or fifteen years of age under lim-

If the particular offense is a "forcible felony," then the term of confinement apparently must be imposed and cannot be suspended. If the particular offense is not a "forcible felony," then confinement is not mandatory. Indeed, either a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation can be utilized as ameliorative "sentencing" devices in lieu of confinement. ited enumerated circumstances.³³² Of course, these types of sexual abuse must not be accompanied by any of the statutory aggravating circumstances. For example, statutory sexual abuse of a "child" constitutes Sexual Abuse in the Second Degree³³³ if the defendant threateningly displays a "deadly weapon"³³⁴ during a non-consensual sexual assault. Moreover, the offense would be raised to the First Degree³³⁵ if either the "child" or a third person is caused "serious injury"³³⁶ during the sexual assault, apparently whether or not the act of intercourse or "sexual contact" was voluntary on the child's part.

10. Penalty Schedules

Considerable judicial discretion has been eliminated in the sentencing options available for Sexual Abuse under the new Criminal Code. Indeed, the options included for First and Second Degree offenses are fixed at life imprisonment and a twenty-five year indeterminate term, respectively.³³⁷ No fines can be imposed and the options of a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, and a suspended sentence are not available.³³⁸ A ten-year indeterminate term of imprisonment, without benefit of a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence, is prescribed for Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree, a class C felony.³³⁹ This term apparently is mandatory, but if not, then a fine could be imposed as the sole penalty.³⁴⁰ The sentencing judge may impose a fine in any amount up to a maximum of $5000, in addition to if not in lieu of the term of confinement. No fines at all were authorized under the pre-revised law for Rape.³⁴¹

One major change in the penalty aspects is that Sexual Abuse, unlike any of its predecessor offenses, now carries a mandatory term of imprisonment. A suspended sentence of probation was possible under the pre-revised law on Rape and Statutory Rape, although neither a deferred judgment nor a deferred sentence was. Neither of these two ameliorative sentencing options is available for Sexual Abuse. An even more restrictive change has occurred with offenses involving unlawful deviate sexual activity. For example, both of these ameliorative sentencing options were available for the pre-revised offenses of non-consensual Sodomy³⁴² and Carnal Knowledge of an Imbecile,³⁴³ but neither is available under the successor offense of Sexual Abuse.

C. Incest

Incest³⁴⁴ remains as the only sexual activity which requires sexual intercourse as an element, unlike related offenses which are satisfied by mere sexual contact³⁴⁵ rather than requiring penetration. In other words, the general definitional clause "sex act"³⁴⁶ does not apply to Incest.

A few changes nevertheless were made in this crime. One change has restricted the number of relatives covered, with Incest extending only to sexual intercourse between persons related by consanguinity within the third degree, as opposed to the fourth degree under the former statute.³⁴⁷ Moreover, the revised crime no longer extends to any relationships by affinity, such as marriage. This restriction of the prohibited parties to "the immediate family or blood relatives"³⁴⁸ thus eliminates cousins as well as step-parent-stepchild relations. The latter, however, would be punishable under the separate crime of Sexual Abuse,³⁴⁹ if and only if the stepchild is under fourteen.

Another change is that a mens rea component has been added, with the prosecution now required to prove that the defendant knew that the person with whom he was having sexual intercourse was related to him.³⁵⁰ This scienter element extends only to knowledge of the particular familial relationship, and the defendant will not be excused for not knowing that sexual intercourse between such relatives is illegal. Scienter as to the familial relationship was not an element under the pre-revised statute, either on its face or as interpreted.³⁵¹ This is a class D felony,³⁵² but is not a "forcible felony."³⁵³

D. *Lascivious Acts With a Child*³⁵⁴

The only change made in the pre-revised crime of Lascivious Acts With a Child³⁵⁵ was the lowering of the cutoff age for a protected "child"³⁵⁶ from sixteen to fourteen. This change corresponds with the lowering of the age of discretion (i.e., legal consent) for Sexual Abuse.³⁵⁷ Consent of the child, of course, is immaterial.

This crime can be committed in several ways, including the acts of (1) fondling or touching a "child's" pubes or genitals; (2) permitting a "child" to fondle or touch one's pubes or genitals; (3) soliciting a "child" to engage in a "sex act";³⁵⁸ (4) inflicting pain or discomfort upon a "child"; or (5) permitting a "child" to inflict pain or discomfort upon oneself. These acts must be accompanied by the specific intent³⁵⁹ of arousing the sexual desires of either the adult defendant or the "child" victim.³⁶⁰ This mens rea component could be difficult to prove, unless the trial courts are liberal in application of the idea of acts speaking for themselves.

351. "Incest, as defined in the [pre-revised] statute, appears to be a strict liability offense, not including any element of knowledge or intent which must be proved by the prosecution for conviction." Family Note, supra note 344, at 568. This authority states:

It is not clear whether a lack of knowledge by the defendant of the familial relationship is a defense to an incest conviction. The Iowa Supreme Court has dealt with the issue by stating that the state need not affirmatively allege and prove knowledge, and leaving the issue of lack of knowledge as a defense for future decision.

1. Age of the Offender

This is the only offense in the Iowa Criminal Code which can be committed only by persons eighteen or older.³⁶¹ This means that persons that are fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, or seventeen years old can inter alia fondle a "child" without committing this class D felony. Presumably this exemption was to immunize consenting teenage lovers "caught in the act." If so, the exemption paints with too broad a brush. After all, this unequivocal language immunizes a complete stranger during a chance, brief "encounter." So viewed, this immunity has to be a casus omissus not intended by the legislature. The alternative criminal offense in ordinary circumstances would be the simple misdemeanor³⁶² offense of Assault.³⁶³ On the other hand, the comparable class D felony³⁶⁴ offense of Assault While Participating in a Felony³⁶⁵ could be available in special circumstances where there is evidence that the act of fondling was coterminous with an intent to commit statutory sexual abuse.

2. Marital Exception

"Lascivious" acts with an offender's "child" spouse are expressly exempted.³⁶⁶ While this exemption technically is necessary to protect an adult spouse from being persecuted for having a "child" bride, nevertheless it seemingly goes too far in certain respects. One type of "lascivious" act involved infliction of pain upon a "child" with the intent of arousing the offender's sexual desires. Whereas the marital exception precludes the adult offender from being convicted of this class D felony offense, nevertheless he or she could be convicted of Assault³⁶⁷ or an aggravated Assault if "serious injury" was either attempted³⁶⁸ or inflicted.³⁶⁹

3. Lesser Included Offense

There are no lesser included offenses³⁷⁰ for Lascivious Acts With a Child. This is because this crime can be committed in several alternative 361. But see IOWA CODE § 709.4(5) (1979) which includes as one of five alternative ways of committing Sexual Abuse in the Third Degree a voluntary "sex act" between a 14 or 15-year old person and a defendant who is six or more years older.

ways, thus not requiring either an assault or a solicitation (both of which otherwise constitute complete lesser crimes).

4. Interrelationship With Other Crimes

The proscription in this offense against soliciting a "child" to engage in a "sex act" is an example of a specific solicitation statute. As such, the less-serious general crime of Solicitation³⁷¹ is not applicable here.³⁷² Moreover, if the solicited "sex act" is for compensation, then this offense would take precedence over the less serious crime of Prostitution,³⁷³ an aggravated misdemeanor³⁷⁴ which includes soliciting for prostitution. Of course, the more serious crime of Sexual Abuse³⁷⁵ would occur if the solicited "sex act" is completed either by penetration or "sexual contact."

Attempted, but unsuccessful, sexual contact of the offender's pubes or genitals with a "child's" could constitute the crime of Assault While Participating in a Felony³⁷⁶—provided that an assault had occurred. While the latter is punishable as a class D felony,³⁷⁷ the same as Lascivious Acts With a Child, nevertheless it is a "forcible felony"³⁷⁸ unlike Lascivious Acts With a Child. Consequently, the "felonious assault"³⁷⁹ offense, with its accompanying unavailability of all ameliorative sentencing alternatives, could be used for obtaining mandatory³⁸⁰ confinement for unauthorized sexual activity with a thirteen-year old. In contrast, a suspended sentence is available for the lascivious offense, whereas a deferred judgment and a deferred sentence are barred only when the child victim is under twelve.³⁸¹

Mere exposure of the offender's pubes or genitals to a child, however, is not a lascivious act. This misconduct would be punishable under the less severe general crime of Indecent Exposure,³⁸² and then only if the act of exposure was accompanied by the requisite intent.

Merely taking indecent liberties with children, however, does not constitute Lascivious Acts With a Child when the improper conduct does not fit within the rubric of the statute. In State v. Baldwin,³⁸³ a conviction for this offense was reversed even though the evidence showed an assault in that the defendant kissed an unwilling girl on the forehead and put his "hand down the front of her shirt."³⁸⁴ The case was charged and prosecuted on the only possible basis of solicitation of a child to engage in a "sex act"—in light of there being no evidence of touching her genitals or of inflicting pain or discomfort upon her. The supreme court pointed out that the human breast is not one of the specifically-enumerated bodily parts within the statutory definition of "sex act" and held that the term "genitalia" (being limited only to the reproductive organs)³⁸⁵ within the definition of "sex act" does not include a human breast. In such situations, the offense of Assault,³⁸⁶ a simple misdemeanor,³⁸⁷ clearly occurs. Whether or not this course of conduct would constitute the much more serious offense of Assault While Participating in a Felony,³⁸⁸ a class D felony³⁸⁹ and a "forcible felony,"³⁹⁰ is an open question.

5. Grading and Sentencing Options

As a class D felony,³⁹¹ this crime carries a maximum penalty of an indeterminate term of five years imprisonment and a fine of up to $5,000. These maxima are the same as those under the pre-revised law.³⁹² Nevertheless, one major change was made.

Because this crime is not a "forcible felony,"³⁹³ a deferred judgment or a deferred sentence is a sentencing alternative, except in cases in which the child is twelve or under.³⁹⁴ This means that a deferred judgment is available only when a thirteen year old child is involved since a "lascivious act" with a fourteen year old is not a crime. This limited distinction seems unnecessary. Because of the sensitive nature of the criminal activity, it appears unwise to authorize a deferred judgment under any circumstances. Indeed, a suspended sentence is available under all circumstances and thus is an adequate ameliorative provision. Legislative oversight is the probable explanation for the twelve to thirteen age dichotomy. The provision barring a deferred judgment for lascivious acts with a child of twelve or under is a

E. Prostitution and Related Offenses

1. Prostitution

Prostitution³⁹⁷ has been defined in the new Criminal Code as selling or purchasing services as a partner in a "sex act,"³⁹⁸ or offering (i.e., attempting) to do so. The new definition has resulted in several changes in this law.³⁹⁹

The former female-only⁴⁰⁰ crime of Prostitution has been extended not only to male customers, but also to male prostitutes and homosexual prostitution.⁴⁰¹ The concept of prostitution has also been expanded with the prohibited activity consisting of participation in a "sex act" which includes "sexual intercourse and certain sodomitic and homosexual activities"⁴⁰² (but not masturbation by hand)⁴⁰³—in other words, "most of the more active perversions."⁴⁰⁴ The applicable terminology of "carnal knowledge" and "lewdness" in the former statutes⁴⁰⁵ was much narrower in being limited to sexual intercourse and thus did not include deviate sex. On the other hand, the newly defined crime of Prostitution clearly is limited on its face to pecuniary type prostitution.⁴⁰⁶

This statute also encompasses soliciting done directly by the prostitute herself or himself,⁴⁰⁷ but not solicitation done by a third party. The latter situation is included in the more serious separate offense of Pimping,⁴⁰⁸ as discussed below.⁴⁰⁹ Of course, any act of solicitation must proceed from the prostitute to an intended patron, rather than from a potential patron (albeit an undercover agent) to the prostitute, in order for the prostitute to be punished.⁴¹⁰ Under the revised Code, however, a solicitation via an offer to purchase a "sex act" made by a patron makes the patron guilty of the offense of Prostitution itself.

Prostitution is an aggravated misdemeanor.⁴¹¹ This penalty compares favorably to the pre-revised felony. Nevertheless, the penalty level still is ridiculously high for a "victimless crime," especially in light of one grade of Involuntary Manslaughter⁴¹² also being an aggravated misdemeanor. Equating recklessly causing the death of a person with a male soliciting a decoy "prostitute" or even a prostitute actually plying her trade is totally beyond reason.

2. Pimping

The new crime of Pimping⁴¹³ attaches, inter alia, to third party solicitation of patrons for a prostitute or to a third party knowingly sharing in the earnings of a prostitute. This crime can also be committed by knowingly⁴¹⁴ furnishing a place to be used for prostitution, whether or not for compensation. The breadth of this provision is evident in this comment by Professor Yeager: "A bar owner or bartender who permits prostitutes to solicit customers on the premises furnishes a place to be used for an act of prostitution, since the mere soliciting is such an act."⁴¹⁵

This provision does not make sense when viewed in the context of the entire Code chapter on Prostitution. Pimping is a "non-forcible"⁴¹⁶ class D felony,⁴¹⁷ whereas Prostitution is only an aggravated misdemeanor.⁴¹⁸ One plausible explanation for treating soliciting by a pimp more harshly than direct soliciting by the prostitute is that the pimp "is not only furthering

A non-forcible felony is subject to a full range of ameliorative sentencing alternatives (i.e., a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence of probation) in lieu of the prescribed confinement or fine. See IOWA CODE § 907.3 (1979). Moreover, it appears that whenever neither a deferred judgment nor a deferred sentence is granted (and thus a sentence is imposed) a fine can be the sole sentence instead of confinement or a suspended sentence. See IOWA CODE § 909.1 (1979) and text accompanying notes 180-83 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980).

the prohibited activity, but is also victimizing the prostitute."⁴¹⁹ However, an unanswered question remains regarding how a cooperative bartender "victimizes the prostitute," so long as he is not getting his cut. A more logical crime to bring the bartender's non-compensated activity within the rubric of the law would be Leasing Premises for Prostitution,⁴²⁰ which is merely a serious misdemeanor.⁴²¹

3. Pandering

The gist of the newly constituted and renamed crime of Pandering⁴²² is recruiting "prostitutes,"⁴²³ maintaining a "brothel,"⁴²⁴ or "knowingly"⁴²⁵ sharing in the income of a brothel.^{426.1} As such, it combines several former statutes⁴²⁶ into one crime with a uniform penalty, a "non-forcible"⁴²⁷ class D felony.⁴²⁸ One change has eliminated any age restrictions in defining the crime or in grading the penalty upward when minors are involved. The potential breadth of this crime is evident in the feasible observation by Professor Yeager that Pandering could be applied to "a landlord who rents premises with the knowledge that the tenant is keeping a brothel, particularly when he is collecting rent which would be considered grossly excessive if the premises were being put to any lawful use."⁴²⁹

4. Leasing Premises for Prostitution

Two changes were made to the statutory forerunner⁴³⁰ to the crime of Leasing Premises for Prostitution.⁴³¹ One involves broadening of the place covered from a "house" under the former statute to "premises," defined as any building, boat, trailer, or other place offering shelter or seclusion. The principal change, however, as explained by Professor Yeager, is that "this section places the duty to act on the landlord as soon as he is aware of the use of the premises [for prostitution], and also requires him to be alert to signs that the premises are being used for prostitution."⁴³² As already noted, this is a serious misdemeanor.⁴³³

F. *Detention in a Brothel*⁴³⁴

This is an obscure offense which, although it is included in the chapter on Sexual Abuse and related offenses, nevertheless actually is an aggravated form of False Imprisonment⁴³⁵ arising out of involuntary prostitution.⁴³⁶ This crime can be committed in either of two ways, both equally punishable as a "non-forcible"⁴³⁷ class C felony.⁴³⁸ One form includes: (1) using force, intimidation, or false pretense (2) to entice another person (3) who is not a "prostitute"⁴³⁹ (4) to enter a "brothel"⁴⁴⁰ (5) with the intent to cause that person to become an inmate thereof. The other alternative consists of: (1) detaining another person whether a "prostitute" or not, (2) in a "brothel," (3) against his or her will, (4) with the intent that the person engage in prostitution therein. Both modes thus are specific intent crimes, and both apply to detention of males for prostitution in light of the neutral or genderless statutory definition of "prostitution."⁴⁴¹

G. Indecent Exposure

The crime of Indecent Exposure⁴⁴² was resurrected in the new Criminal Code, after its predecessor version⁴⁴³ had been voided for vagueness in 1974.⁴⁴⁴ The actus reus of the revised crime can consist, in the alternative, of either (1a) exposure of one's genitals or pubes to another person other than one's spouse or (1b) commission of a "sex act"⁴⁴⁵ in the presence or view of a third person;⁴⁴⁶ with the additional dual mens rea elements of both (2) intending to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either party and (3) knowing (or having reasonable basis for knowing) that such conduct is offensive to the viewer.⁴⁴⁷ Indecent exposure thus is essentially a visual assault crime.

This new statutory version should pass constitutional scrutiny. Its predecessor had made it a crime for any person to "designedly make an open and indecent or obscene exposure of his or her person,"⁴⁴⁸ without defining "indecent" or statutorily providing any "descriptions of proscribed ultimate criminal conduct."⁴⁴⁹ Voiding the pre-revised statute, the Iowa Supreme Court considered the above quoted statutory language to be "so indefinite and uncertain that persons of ordinary intelligence are given inadequate notice as to what conduct is thereby prohibited."⁴⁵⁰ Moreover, the supreme court saw "no plausible basis upon which peace officers, judges or juries may reasonably ascertain, with any degree of certainty, guidelines essential to a determination of the legislatively intended application of the statute here in question."⁴⁵¹ All doubt should be removed in the new statutory version, especially with the statutory definition of "sex act."⁴⁵²

1. Mens Rea

The scope of the prohibited activity under this section is restricted drastically by the dual particularized mens rea components. For example, an entertainer in an establishment with a liquor or beer license who performs acts prohibited under the section on Public Indecent Exposure⁴⁵³ cannot be punished for Indecent Exposure in the face of the element of being offensive to the viewer. Moreover, a strip-in protest demonstration has already been held under the predecessor statute as not constituting Indecent Exposure because of the intent not being to arouse sexual desires of either party.⁴⁵⁴ Likewise, either a drunk urinating in public or a "mooner" certainly should know that his despicable conduct would be offensive to any viewer, intended or not, but certainly nobody's sexual desires should be aroused.⁴⁵⁵ On the other hand, public nudity while not per se being criminalized⁴⁵⁶ nevertheless under certain circumstances might come within the rubric of Indecent Exposure. Finally, the prosecution will, of course, have to prove intentional exposure as opposed to careless disrobing in the public view, as where a neighbor or passerby sees what appears to be an exhibitionist in front of a window in his or her own residence.⁴⁵⁷

2. Relationship to Other Crime

The gravamen of this offense is exposure of one's own genitals or pubes. If the actus reus consists instead of fondling or touching the genitals or pubes of another, then, of course, this crime does not occur. Rather, this would constitute the crime of Lascivious Acts With a Child⁴⁵⁸ if done so with the requisite sexual desire, intent and with a victim under fourteen. The crime would either be simple Assault⁴⁵⁹ or Assault While Participating in a Felony⁴⁶⁰ (i.e., attempted Sexual Abuse),⁴⁶¹ depending upon the surrounding circumstances, if either of these two requisites is missing. Of course, if the defendant's pubes or genitals actually touch the victim's pubes or genitals, the extremely more serious crime of Sexual Abuse⁴⁶² would be complete even without penetration.

Unlike the offenses of Sexual Abuse and Lascivious Acts With a Child, this crime does not make special provision for children. That is, exposing oneself to a "child"⁴⁶³ (e.g., a thirteen year old) is not per se a crime. In order to make this conduct punishable, it may be necessary to create a doctrine of implied offensiveness similar to implied consent under the statutory sexual abuse (Statutory Rape) provision. Otherwise, what if a "worldly" thirteen year old girl encourages a male flasher and thus is not at all offended by his performance? To avoid a possible casus omissus, an amendment making exposure to a minor an express way of committing this crime would be in order. Alternatively, the crime of Lascivious Acts With a Child could be amended to include exposure of one's genitals or pubes to a child.

3. Grading

There is only one grade of this offense, which is a serious misdemeanor.⁴⁶⁴ Unlike for the sex related offenses of Sexual Abuse and Lascivious Acts with a Child, a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, and a suspended sentence are available sentencing options in all cases of Indecent Exposure.⁴⁶⁵

H. Obscenity Offenses⁴⁶⁶

1. Generally

Three new obscenity offenses have been added to the new Criminal Code, joining the two pre-revised offenses which were re-enacted verbatim. The latter two offenses consist of Knowingly Disseminating or Exhibiting Obscene Material to a Minor⁴⁶⁷ and Knowingly Admitting a Minor to Premises Where Obscene Material is Exhibited.⁴⁶⁸ Like these two offenses, one of the new crimes—Sexual Exploitation of Children⁴⁶⁹—is concerned only with protection of non-adults.⁴⁷⁰ On the other hand, the two other new offenses—Sale of Hard Core Pornography⁴⁷¹ and Public Indecent Exposure⁴⁷²—relate to adults also. A widely varying statutory standard of objectionable material or conduct is included within the rubric of the “obscenity” chapter, including but not limited to, depiction of a “sex act,”⁴⁷³ as that term is specially defined in chapter 728. Indeed, no fewer than three different specific definitions of “sex act” are used in these five obscenity offenses collectively. Each of these specific definitions is much broader than the same term as defined in the general definitional clause in section 702.17, using the latter’s underlying penetration or “sexual contact” merely as the definitional foundation.

The basic specific definition in this chapter⁴⁷⁴ includes both actual and

470. There are age differences even as to these offenses. For purposes of the two offenses relating to making obscene material available to minors, a “minor” is a person under the age of 18. See id. § 728.1(6). Contrastingly, a child is defined in the provision on Sexual Exploitation of a Child as a person under the age of 14. See id. §§ 702.5, 728.12 and text accompanying notes 144.1-55 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980).

simulated sexual contact similar to that in the general definitional clause in section 702.17, in addition to digital manipulation, bestiality, and oral-anal contact. This basic definition is used in the offenses of Dissemination and Exhibition of Obscene Material to Minors⁴⁷⁵ and Admitting Minors to Premises Where Obscene Material Is Exhibited.⁴⁷⁶

A more restrictive definition of "sex act" is contained in the crime of Sale of Hard Core Pornography.⁴⁷⁷ Herein, depiction of the requisite "sex act" as defined in section 728.1(7) must involve "sado-masochistic abuse, excretory functions, a child, or bestiality."⁴⁷⁸

The specific term "prohibited sexual act"⁴⁷⁹ is extremely broad as the central factor in the crime of Sexual Exploitation of Children.⁴⁸⁰ This specific term includes six separate acts in addition to a "sex act" as generally defined in section 702.17.

2. *Dissemination and Exhibition of Obscene Material to Minors*⁴⁸¹

The elements of this serious misdemeanor⁴⁸² offense are: (1) knowingly (2) disseminating or exhibiting (3) obscene material (4) to a minor (5) by a person other than the minor's parent or guardian. This provision was reenacted in the same form as its original passage in 1973.⁴⁸³

a. "Obscene." An unusual definition of obscenity is included in the new Criminal Code, as follows:

'Obscene material' is any material depicting or describing the genitals, sex acts, masturbation, excretory functions or sado-masochistic abuse which the average person, taking the material as a whole and applying contemporary community standards with respect to what is suitable material for minors, would find appeals to the prurient interest and is patently offensive; and the material, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, scientific, political or artistic value.⁴⁸⁴

Although this definition incorporates the *Roth-Miller*⁴⁸⁵ definition (the unitalicized portion of the above quote) for first amendment purposes, it also contains two additional limiting features (in the italicized portions). One is that obscenity is to be determined by "what is suitable material for minors.”⁴⁸⁶ The other is that obscene material per se is not prohibited; rather only that obscene material relating to “the genitals, sex acts,⁴⁸⁷ masturbation, excretory functions or sado-masochistic abuse.”⁴⁸⁸ This enumeration appears all-encompassing, but any activity or depiction beyond this listing would not be proscribed notwithstanding its obscene character under the Roth-Miller standard.

b. Material. “Material” is statutorily defined narrowly to include printed or written material (e.g., books, magazines, and newspapers), pictorial representations (e.g., photographs, pictures, drawings, and motion pictures), statues, and recordings.⁴⁸⁹ So defined, this does not include oral communications and live performances.⁴⁹⁰

c. Exhibiting. The act of exhibiting is quite broad under this provision, since it includes exhibiting obscene material “so that it can be observed by a minor on or off the premises where it is displayed.”⁴⁹¹ This provision thus places an affirmative duty on a merchant to keep this material “under wraps,” especially in terms of a display open to public view. It is not clear whether this provision is meant to include any person (other than the minor’s parent or guardian) who merely shows (“exhibits”) obscene material to minors in private, as opposed to a commercial “exhibition” in a store or pornography shop. This provision is not limited to a commercial setting in light of the broad language of “any person.” The gravamen of this offense is exposure of minors to objectionable or harmful material, and the setting of the exhibition, whether private or commercial, should be of no consequence. Nevertheless, parents or guardians are expressly exempted from the reach of this statute, while interestingly, spouses are not.

d. Dissemination. The act of disseminating consists of a mere physical 486. The concept of addressing obscenity standards to material suitable for minors was upheld in Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629 (1968). However, as made clear in Pinkus v. United States, 436 U.S. 293 (1978), children are not to be included as part of the local community in applying “contemporary community standards” under an obscenity statute of general applicability (i.e., to both adults and minors). There is no Pinkus-type problem with Iowa CODE §§ 728.2-.3 (1979), of course, in light of their application being limited to minors.

487. A specific definitional clause defining “sex act” for purposes of the obscenity offenses appears at Iowa CODE § 728.1(7) (1979). See also text accompanying note 246 supra.

488. See id. § 728.1(5) (1979).

489. Id. § 728.1(2) (1979). See Kaplan v. California, 413 U.S. 115 (1973) (nonpictorial representation of conduct can be obscene under first amendment standards).

490. “The exclusion of oral obscenity would appear to be a practical one, but the failure to include live performances was in all probability an oversight.” J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 631. The anomaly of this is pointed out by Professor Yeager, in his discussion of Iowa CODE § 728.3 (1979), to-wit: “Note that because of the definition of obscene material, it is a violation of this section to sell to a minor a ticket to a theater exhibiting a sexually explicit moving picture, or to admit him to the premises, but it is not a violation to sell him a ticket or to admit him to a carnival show exhibiting the same acts in a live performance.” J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON § 632, at 157.

transfer of possession. Thus, no consideration is necessary, nor is it necessary for the transferee to receive permanent possession.⁴⁹²

e. Knowledge. Scienter is an element of the crime, with the defendant statutorily (and constitutionally)⁴⁹³ required to be "aware of the character of the matter"⁴⁹⁴ which he is charged with disseminating or exhibiting. Whether actual knowledge of the obscene contents of the materials will need to be proven, or whether such culpable knowledge can merely be inferred, could depend upon the reputation of the particular medium (e.g., magazine), the type of business and experience of the defendant, and the nature of the advertising involving the medium.⁴⁹⁵

f. Specific Affirmative Defense. It is an affirmative defense⁴⁹⁶ that not only did the defendant reasonably believe that the minor involved was not underaged, but also that the minor either (a) exhibited false proof of his age, or (b) was accompanied by an adult parent or an adult spouse.⁴⁹⁷ Thus, a seller of obscene material must only make a good faith attempt to prevent sales (or exhibiting) to minors in order to come within the protection of this defense. However, the burden is upon the seller to establish his good faith attempt based upon the bi-partite test set out above. Strangely, this defense applies only to this offense and not to the related offense of Admitting Minors to Premises Where Obscene Material is Exhibited.⁴⁹⁸

3. *Admitting Minors to Premises Where Obscene Material is Exhibited*⁴⁹⁹

The elements of this serious misdemeanor⁵⁰⁰ offense are: (1) knowingly; (2a) admitting or (2b) providing a pass for; (3) a minor; (4) to premises where obscene material is exhibited. This provision was re-enacted verbatim from the prior code.⁵⁰¹

The gist of this offense is the act of admitting minors onto premises where obscene material is exhibited. The concept of admitting is quite broad, including providing a pass for admittance. Thus, ticket sellers at X-

496. This is the only defense denominated as an "affirmative defense" in the entire Criminal Code. This lends some support to the argument that the legislative intent is that all of the other "defenses" are to be considered differently than this one "affirmative defense." That all-important difference can very well be in allocation of the burden of proof (with defendant bearing the burden of proof only as to an "affirmative defense").

rated movies are within the provision's proscription. Concomitantly, actual exposure to the obscene material is not a sine qua non of this offense.⁵⁰²

Unlike the offense of Dissemination and Exhibition of Obscene Material to Minors,⁵⁰³ there is no exemption for parents or guardians of the minors involved. This means that parents or guardians could be guilty of providing a pass to their minor children or minor wards for entry into a place for or including exhibition of obscene material. Moreover, an operator of a "porn shop" cannot legally admit his minor child or minor ward onto his premises. On the other hand, the term "premises" seemingly should be read as being limited to commercial premises. Clearly, the legislative intent was to include X-rated theaters and porno book shops, and not a private residence. That is, a parent or guardian would not be guilty of this offense merely by having obscene material on the premises. A more difficult question arises when a legitimate business (e.g., a drug store) incidentally sells obscene magazines. Obviously, the manager of a drug store could not be prosecuted for the mere admittance of a minor onto the premises. On the other hand, such a manager could very well have a duty to take certain precautions to see that obscene material is not made available to minors. This could include special packaging as well as tight restrictions on browsing.

4. Sexual Exploitation of Children

The new crime of Sexual Exploitation of Children⁵⁰⁴ was passed in 1978,⁵⁰⁵ as an addition to the new Criminal Code. With its focus upon "children"⁵⁰⁶ rather than "minors,"⁵⁰⁷ this provision only protects persons under age fourteen.

The gravamen of the offense is commercially photographing a child involved in a "prohibited sexual act" or a simulated "prohibited sexual act." A "prohibited sexual act"⁵⁰⁸ is statutorily defined much more broadly than "sexual act"⁵⁰⁹ is defined for purposes of either of the two obscenity offenses relating to minors or for Sexual Abuse. Any of the following constitute a "prohibited sexual act": (1) a "sex act" as defined in the general definitional clause applicable to the entire Criminal Code⁵¹⁰ (and thus to Sexual Abuse)⁵¹¹ rather than as defined specifically in the two obscenity offenses relating to minors; (2) acts of bestiality involving a child; (3) acts of sado-masochistic abuse involving a child; (4) "lascivious"-type acts⁵¹² of fondling or touching of the pubes or genitals of a child or of another person by a child; or (5) nudity of a child.⁵¹³

An offender can commit this crime either by being involved in the photographing itself, or by being a child's parent or guardian and knowingly permitting or otherwise causing the child to engage in the prohibited acts while knowing or intending that the act or simulated act will be photographed for commercial purposes. The legislative intent to prohibit the reportedly growing business of child models for pornography magazines is apparent in the limiting language in the statute itself, which refers to the sex act or simulated sex act being "photographed, filmed, or otherwise preserved in a negative, slide, book, magazine, or other print or visual medium."⁵¹⁴

Unlike the offense of Dissemination and Exhibition of Obscene Material to Minors,⁵¹⁵ this offense does not recognize a defense of reasonable mistake as to age of the child. This differentiation is explainable in light of the gravity of the offense of Sexual Exploitation of Children, similar to the essentially strict liability approach of the offense of Sexual Abuse of a Child.⁵¹⁶

This is a class C felony,⁵¹⁷ but is not a "forcible felony."⁵¹⁸ It is the only obscenity offense which is a felony.

5. *Sale of Hard Core Pornography*⁵¹⁹

Unlike the two pre-revised offenses relating to merely obscene material which applied only to exhibition or distribution to minors, and the new offense of Sexual Exploitation of Children, the new Code criminalizes the sale of hard core pornography to anyone, including adults. The elements of this simple misdemeanor⁵²⁰ offense are: (1) knowingly;⁵²¹ (2) selling or offering for sale; (3) material depicting a "sex act";⁵²² (4) which involves either

"sado-masochistic abuse,"⁵²³ excretory functions, a "child"⁵²⁴ (i.e., under fourteen), or bestiality; and (5) which also is obscene under the Roth-Miller "contemporary community standards" test.⁵²⁵

The prohibited activity is sale or offering for sale, and thus mere possession itself will not be illegal—either by the customer or apparently by the distributor who has not at least impliedly offered hard core pornography for sale (e.g., in storage but not on the display for sale counter). Moreover, "[m]aking such material available on a non-remuneration basis does not violate this section, nor does it appear that the rental of this material is prohibited."⁵²⁶

Unlike Justice Stewart's imprecise, albeit perceptive, standard of knowing pornography "when he sees it,"⁵²⁷ this statute contains a detailed tripartite definition. First and foremost, there must be a "sex act," as specifically defined in section 728.1(7) of the Code. Secondly, not all "sex acts" qualify, but rather only those involving either sado-masochistic abuse, excretory functions, a child or bestiality. Finally, there unbelievably also must be a finding of obscenity under the Roth-Miller standards. This suggests that there could be material depicting a "sex act" involving either sado-masochistic abuse, excretory functions, a child, or bestiality which is not obscene.

6. *Public Indecent Exposure*⁵²⁸

The other new crime in chapter 728 of the new Criminal Code is Public Indecent Exposure, which is a serious misdemeanor.⁵²⁹ It is not tied to any obscenity standard whether for minors or adults. As Professor Yeager points out: "The performance, exhibition or display need not appeal to the prurient interest, be patently offensive, nor must it lack serious literary, scientific, political or artistic value."⁵³⁰ In fact, he notes that this section was included in chapter 725 on Vice, instead of chapter 728, in the Criminal Code bill as passed by the General Assembly in 1976. The transfer was made in the editing process by the Legislative Service Bureau. The substantive problem with this transfer is that one aspect of this crime involves a "sex act" and chapter 728 contains a specific definitional clause whereas chapter 725 does not. As passed, the legislature used the general definition of "sex act" in section 702.17 of the Code by using the general term "sex act" without providing a special definition. The two definitions differ in that the general definition does not include simulated sexual contact in any form, bestiality, digital manipulation, or oral-anal contact. Unfortunately for the practitioner, the Code makes no reference to this transfer in the "scope notes" following each section in the Criminal Code.

The subject of this offense is limited to the owner or operator of a premises with a liquor or beer license. The prohibited activity is allowing or permitting any of the following acts by performers or patrons: (1) actual or simulated public performance of any "sex act" upon the premises; (2) exposure of the genitals, buttocks or female breast of a waiter/waitress; (3) exposure of the genitals or female breast nipple of any entertainer (whether paid or not); (4) allowing any person who publicly exposes his or her genitals, pubic hair or anus to remain on the premises; or (5) displaying of films or pictures depicting any "sex act" or display of pubic hair, anus, or genitals. These very activities can legally occur on premises which do not have a liquor or beer license.

The license-holder and manager thus have a duty to prevent any of these prohibited activities and exhibitions from occurring on the premises—whether by entertainers, waitresses or waiters, or even patrons. Of course, strict liability should not attach, in light of the statutory language "allow or permit." This does mean, however, that the supervisory person must take decisive corrective action to prevent recurrence of any such incidents.

This section does not speak at all to the nude entertainer, etc. Because there is no general public nudity crime in Iowa, any criminal responsibility of an entertainer, etc., would have to come under the crime of Indecent Exposure.⁵³¹ However, a prosecution under this offense would be impractical because of the element of specific intent "to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of either party," as well as the actor knowing that "the act is offensive to the viewer."⁵³²

One definitional problem with this new statute has surfaced already. This involves what "nudity" is, when "viewed" in the context of small patches of scotch tape over a stripper's nipples. Moreover, the exact contours of what constitutes a nipple present a problem of proof under this provision.⁵³³

a. Constitutionality. The constitutionality of this section has been upheld by the Iowa Supreme Court. In Three K.C. v. Richter,⁵³⁴ the court fol-

533. An example of this definitional problem can be found in a recent arrest reported in the Des Moines Tribune, 12-22-78, p. 23. The story read: "Magistrate George Stein Thursday found Diana Neubauer, 24, a Des Moines go-go dancer, innocent of a charge of indecent exposure. Tama Police officer Dennis Purdy filed the charge after watching Neubauer perform at Bill's place in Tama this week. The dancer denied the charge." Id.

lowed the lead of the Supreme Court of the United States⁵³⁵ in declaring that a state's general police power in regulating the sale of liquor outweighs any first amendment interest in nude dancing and that a state can therefore ban such dancing as a part of its liquor license program.⁵³⁶ Accordingly, the statute was upheld against the contention that it constituted deprivation of property without due process of law even though "cover up" compliance with the new regulation was shown to cost the owners "substantial profits."

b. Exceptions. Section 728.5 excepts from its coverage "a theater, concert hall, art center, museum, or similar establishment." The constitutionality of this exceptions clause was upheld in *Three K.C. v. Richter*⁵³⁷ against contentions of denial of equal protection and void for vagueness.

At first blush, these exceptions appear unnecessary in light of the practical consideration that the requisite specific intent would generally be lacking in a legitimate theatrical performance involving nudity. The practical result of this legislation's stating of the obvious in this exceptions clause may be to legitimize public nudity, in its barest essentials, in such enterprises as burlesque theaters and nude model encounter establishments.⁵³⁸ And, of course, any of these exempted businesses can promote acts of public indecent exposure even if they have liquor licenses.

III. KIDNAPPING AND RELATED OFFENSES

A. *Kidnapping*⁵³⁹

The pre-revised crime⁵⁴⁰ of Kidnapping⁵⁴¹ has been changed in several respects, although still essentially maintaining its common law character of being an aggravated form of False Imprisonment.⁵⁴² The actus reus of the revised offense expressly can consist either of confining a person or removing a person "from one place to another" (either within or outside of Iowa),⁵⁴³ with the attendant circumstance of knowingly⁵⁴⁴ doing so without authority or consent to do so.⁵⁴⁵ Without more, the crime merely would be False Imprisonment.⁵⁴⁶ The aggravating circumstances which upgrade the crime to Kidnapping consist of the particular accompanying specific intent.⁵⁴⁷ Formerly, Kidnapping was not a specific intent⁵⁴⁸ crime at all,⁵⁴⁹ but now requires proof of any one of six specific intentions accompanying the actus reus.⁵⁵⁰

1. Confinement

The alternative actus reus of unlawful confinement no longer requires that the confinement be secret (unlike under both the former statute⁵⁵¹ and common law).⁵⁵² Requiring that the unlawful confinement also be a secret confinement was felt to be too limiting in the modern context.⁵⁵³ For example, at least two of the types of kidnapping, as re-defined, necessarily involve acting in the open (if not even being well publicized).⁵⁵⁴ Moreover, secret confinement is not required in three of the other four modes of conducting kidnapping, as re-defined, thus leaving only one such mode—the specific intent to secretly confine—requiring the confinement to be secret.

“Confinement” is not defined in the statutory provisions expressly covering Kidnapping. However, “confinement” is defined in the related, albeit lesser included offense,⁵⁵⁵ of False Imprisonment,⁵⁵⁶ as that a person is confined when his "freedom to move about is substantially restricted by force, threat or deception."⁵⁵⁷ Under the standard interpretational guide of in pari materia, this definition should be also used for Kidnapping, in the absence of any legislative intent to the contrary. Indeed, the Bar's Uniform Jury Instructions on Kidnapping include an instruction on "confinement"⁵⁵⁸ which is "partially derived from Section 710.7."⁵⁵⁹ As amplified in this instruction, the confinement can be "either in the place where the restriction commences or in a place to which he has been removed" and "need not exist for any particular length of time, as long as it is for the purpose of restricting the person's freedom to move about."⁵⁶⁰

The specific intent to secretly confine is defined in Uniform Jury Instruction No. 1008 as "something more than to restrict the movement of [the victim]. Such intent means an intent to secrete, conceal, hide, or prevent [the victim's] discovery."⁵⁶¹

2. Other Objectives

In addition to the intent to secretly confine his victim, the kidnapper may have one of five other specific intents. The intent of holding his victim for ransom is a carryover from the pre-revised law.⁵⁶² Two other, closely-related situations arise when a person is confined (or removed) with the intent to use the victim as a hostage or—in an act of political terrorism—to seize public personnel with the intent to interfere with a governmental function.⁵⁶³ The other two aggravating circumstances occur when the kidnapping is done for the purpose either of inflicting "serious injury"⁵⁶⁴ or of committing "sexual abuse."⁵⁶⁵

3. Grading

Kidnapping is graded into three degrees. Each is classified as a "forcible felony," thus carrying a mandatory term of imprisonment.

Kidnapping is of the first-degree⁵⁶⁶ in any of these three situations: the victim suffered "serious injury,"⁵⁶⁷ or was intentionally⁵⁶⁸ subjected either to "sexual abuse"⁵⁶⁹ or to "torture."⁵⁷⁰ Thus, these three situations require a specific result of injury as opposed to the more inchoate situation of unlawful confinement or removal merely with the intent to injure. This grading makes sense, as the gravest type of kidnapping is reserved for acts based upon injury to the victim.

The decision to categorize Kidnapping in the First Degree as a class A felony⁵⁷¹ (i.e., punishable by automatic life imprisonment) appears to be out of proportion. The absurdity is most apparent in light of Murder in the First Degree⁵⁷² also being a class A felony. The ultimate harm caused in Murder is so much greater than in a non-homicidal kidnapping. Downgrading the latter to a class B felony⁵⁷³ (punishable by an indeterminate term of 25 years) as the Criminal Code bill was originally recommended⁵⁷⁴ and introduced in 1974,⁵⁷⁵ would be preferable.

The absurdity continues when one considers the infliction of either "serious injury," sexual abuse, or torture separately without benefit of the additional aspect of a kidnapping. Infliction of a "serious injury," standing alone,⁵⁷⁶ is at best⁵⁷⁷ only a class C felony⁵⁷⁸ (punishable by an indeterminate term of 10 years). Because the infliction of torture could very well not even result in a "serious injury," it's entirely possible that torture, by itself, would be punishable merely as Assault with Intent to Inflict Serious Injury⁵⁷⁹ (only an aggravated *misdemeanor*⁵⁸⁰ with maximum confinement of two years). Finally, Sexual Abuse in the First Degree⁵⁸¹ (a class A felony) is limited to sexual assaults resulting in a "serious injury" to a person, with an ordinary sexual assault being merely a class C felony. Yet, an ordinary sexual assault upon a kidnap victim bootstraps this into a class A felony. Mere confinement or removal from one place to another should not be equated with infliction of "serious injury."

The two types of aggravating circumstances which constitute Kidnapping in the Second Degree⁵⁸² are being armed with a "dangerous weapon"⁵⁸³ and intending to hold the victim for ransom.⁵⁸⁴ The former is a new concept in Iowa law,⁵⁸⁵ and would appear to limit the new, lesser crime of False Imprisonment⁵⁸⁶ to unlawful confinements by unarmed offenders. The latter was the only aggravating circumstance under the pre-revised law.⁵⁸⁷ Being the product of the time of the post-Lindbergh baby kidnapping hysteria, the old Kidnapping for Ransom offense⁵⁸⁸ carried an automatic penalty of life imprisonment. The ridiculousness of that penalty level was evident in the interpretation of "ransom" as including sexual favors (albeit deviate) in State v. Knutson.⁵⁸⁹

Kidnapping in the Third Degree⁵⁹⁰ is the residual section, which will not encompass very many kidnappings in light of "the broad scope" of First and Second Degree Kidnapping.⁵⁹¹ Nevertheless, it appears that this category would include those kidnappings when the specific intent was one of the following, whether the intent was actually carried out or not: to secretly confine the victim, to use the victim as a hostage or shield, or to interfere with the performance of a governmental function. Additionally, Kidnapping

That this type of kidnapping need only be carried out with the intent to hold the victim for ransom, without requiring payment thereof, is made clear in UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTION No. 1005, to wit: "Where one detains another for the purpose of obtaining money from him or another as the price of release, whether the victim is actually released without payment is immaterial." See UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 1005. is in the Third Degree when the unconsummated intent was either to inflict a "serious injury" (when it was not actually inflicted) or to subject a person to sexual abuse (when the sexual abuse was not actually committed).⁵⁹² In most of these situations, it is logical to expect that the offender would be armed (with a "dangerous weapon") and the offense ipso facto would constitute Kidnapping in the Second Degree. In other words, the Third Degree offenses would involve only unarmed kidnappers.

4. *Felony Murder Rule*⁵⁹³

Inclusion of Kidnapping in the classification of a "forcible felony"⁵⁹⁴ has the effect of making Kidnapping one of the underlying felonies for application of the felony murder rule to Murder in the First Degree,⁵⁹⁵ unlike under pre-revised law.⁵⁹⁶ Moreover, this applies to all three degrees of Kidnapping, since they are all classified as "forcible felonies."

5. Merger

One fundamental question to be answered by the Iowa Supreme Court,⁵⁹⁷ absent any legislative guidance, is whether a defendant can be convicted of both Kidnapping and another offense, e.g., Robbery or Sexual Abuse, committed coincidental with the Kidnapping. The bald statutory language provides that Kidnapping occurs when a person "either confines a person or removes a person from one place to another . . ."⁵⁹⁸ Because a victim of a Robbery or of a Sexual Abuse necessarily is confined at least temporarily,⁵⁹⁹ it would appear that both Kidnapping and Robbery or Sexual Abuse would lie in these circumstances. At least there is nothing on the face of the statute indicating a legislative intent to prevent this double charging.⁶⁰⁰ Iowa's Kidnapping statute is somewhat unique in its inclusion

Accordingly, the felony murder rule as to Kidnapping applied only to second-degree murder under the pre-revised law. See J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 139.

597. In the only case of this nature under the pre-revised law, the supreme court mentioned but did not decide the issue in State v. Knutson, 220 N.W.2d 575 (Iowa 1974). But see J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 233. "[T]here is some suggestion in that case that there must be more than merely confining a rape victim at or near the spot where she was accosted and where the rape was attempted or committed."

599. J. Yeager, TRAINING MANUAL, supra note 14, at 54.

600. See J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 235 at 65: "Because of the wording of of confinement as an alternative mode of the offense being committed. The more common Kidnapping statute requires moving the victim from one place to another.⁶⁰¹ Two opposing views exist in other states as to whether Kidnapping and other offenses incidental thereto are both punishable.⁶⁰² One view is that detention of the victim, together with any amount of accompanying coerced movement of the victim of a robbery or sexual abuse is necessarily sufficient to constitute the separate crime of Kidnapping. This theory is based upon "the fact of a forcible removal, and not the distance of the forcible removal."⁶⁰³ The opposing view is that movements merely incidental to the commission of a robbery or sexual abuse "and which did not substantially increase the risk of harm over and above that risk which was necessarily present"⁶⁰⁴ in the Robbery or Sexual Abuse did not constitute the separate crime of Kidnapping. These latter jurisdictions require that the victim be moved a substantial distance from the original scene of the criminal confrontation.

In the absence of any pronouncement by the Iowa Supreme Court,⁶⁰⁵ this question is open. There clearly are precedents from many jurisdictions supportive of either position.⁶⁰⁶

The better view is that the requisite confinement or removal must be more than merely incidental to effectuate another crime in order for both crimes to be punishable. As pointed out by Professor Yeager: "Unless sections 709.3 and 709.4 [Sexual Abuse in the Second and Third Degrees] are to become surplusage, it will be necessary to require some confinement or movement of the victim beyond that which is a normal incident of sexual abuse, and considering the severity of the penalty imposed by this section, the acts of the kidnapper should be required to add substantially to the heinousness of the sexual abuse, if this section is to apply."⁶⁰⁷

Kidnapping essentially is an inchoate crime designed to effectuate some other purpose including commission of another crime, since one does not wrongfully confine or remove another just for the sake of confining or removing another. For example, a kidnapper uses his incidental act of kidnapping to "secure" his intended sexual abuse victim. Thus, a kidnapper should be punishable both for Kidnapping and Sexual Abuse only when he prolongs the wrongful confinement of a sexual abuse victim well beyond the period of subsection 3, the question will arise where the other offense is a homicide, assault or sexual abuse." But see TRAINING MANUAL, supra note 14, at 54: "However, it is not the intent of the code that all or most felonies against the person also be kidnapping, merely because some secret confinement is involved."

time of the sexual attack. Thus, two counts should not be permissible for a mere 15-20 minute "quick trip" into the country or to a nearby deserted park (i.e., within a few blocks or even miles of the original site of the kidnapping) in order to consummate a sexual abuse. In contrast, a ten-hour period of continued wrongful confinement of a sexual abuse victim should clearly warrant two counts, in light of the significant incremental harm done over and above the sexual abuse. For example, the victim is left anguished over a prolonged period as to whether she will be released unharmed or eventually killed to prevent her identification of the defendant. Situations falling in between cloud the issue, with the preferred resolution to be left to a case-by-case basis. The legal standard should be something akin to Professor Yeager's suggestion, viz. the kidnapping, in order to be punishable separately, must have "add[ed] substantially to the heinousness of the sexual abuse"⁶⁰⁸ or other target crime. Alternatively, the prosecutor, in his discretion, can always elect to charge either Kidnapping or the consummated target crime itself (e.g., Sexual Abuse).⁶⁰⁹ The open issue is whether he can charge both.

Under the prevailing Iowa law as to lesser included offenses⁶¹⁰ and the related principle of double jeopardy,⁶¹¹ multiple convictions for Kidnapping and another intertwined offense (e.g., Sexual Abuse) are permissible. Thus, an ordinary kidnapping is punishable in the lowest of three degrees if the objective of the kidnapping (e.g., Sexual Abuse) is not achieved. On the other hand, a "successful" kidnapper who actually subjects his victim to sexual abuse is subject both to Kidnapping in the First Degree and to Sexual Abuse (in one of three degrees depending upon varying circumstances surrounding the unlawful "sex act").⁶¹² These multiple counts (and, more importantly, dual convictions) are permissible even though the sexual abuse was the sole factor bootstrapping an ordinary Kidnapping in the Third Degree (a mere class C felony) into Kidnapping in the First Degree (a class A felony). Thus, Sexual Abuse is an integral part of the charge of Kidnapping in the First Degree, since the latter offense (in this situation) consists of (1) a kidnapping and (2) a sexual abuse committed during the duration of the kidnapping. Accordingly, it seems logical that Sexual Abuse is a lesser included offense of the crime of Kidnapping in the First Degree (by commission of sexual abuse upon the kidnapping victim). However, committing a sexual abuse upon a kidnapping victim is not required for Kidnapping in the First Degree. That is, two other circumstances can raise an ordinary Kidnapping into Kidnapping in the First Degree. Consequently, Sexual Abuse is not a lesser included offense under the elemental test of State v. Stewart,⁶¹³ and multiple convictions accordingly would not constitute double jeopardy as applied also under State v. Stewart.⁶¹⁴

a. Kidnapping in the Second or Third Degrees. It appears that while Kidnapping in the Second and Third Degrees may be lesser included offenses of Kidnapping in the First Degree, nevertheless one or the other may not necessarily be so. Thus, lesser included offense instructions on these two degrees need not, indeed can not, be given in all cases of Kidnapping in the First Degree. The law requires that a lesser included offense meet the dual legal and factual test. Thus, an instruction on Kidnapping in the Second Degree should not be given, even though an instruction on the lesser included offense of Kidnapping in the Third Degree would be required, where there was no evidence in the record to show either that the defendant was armed with a "dangerous weapon" or that the defendant's purpose was to hold the victim for ransom. On the other hand, if there was sufficient evidence of just one of these circumstances—e.g., being armed with a "dangerous weapon"—then a lesser included offense instruction on Kidnapping in the Second Degree should be given, but only as to being armed with a "dangerous weapon" and not to the alternative basis of holding the victim for ransom.

Kidnapping in the Third Degree, on the other hand, appears to be a lesser included offense to be submitted in every case of kidnapping, whether the principal offense is Kidnapping in the First or Second Degree. Being the residual category, Kidnapping in the Third Degree seems to meet both the legal and factual tests of a lesser included offense, as it would encompass the situations in which the enumerated aggravating circumstances constituting either first or second degree kidnapping are not proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

b. Child Stealing and Violating a Custodial Order. Neither Child Stealing⁶¹⁵ nor Violating a Custodial Order⁶¹⁶ can ever be a lesser included offense of Kidnapping (in any of the three degrees). This is because neither offense can meet the legal test, since each of these offenses requires one or more elements that the principal crime of Kidnapping does not.

c. False Imprisonment. It appears that False Imprisonment⁶¹⁷ necessarily will be a lesser included offense in all cases of Kidnapping (irrespective of the degree of the principal crime). This is because False Imprisonment basically is merely an unlawful confinement crime whereas Kidnapping (as an aggravated form of False Imprisonment) is an unlawful confinement (or removal) crime that is accompanied by several types of specific intent. The fact that False Imprisonment requires a confinement whereas the actus reus of Kidnapping can be satisfied either by a confinement or a removal should not preclude the legal test of a lesser included offense being met. This is because a removal can not be effected without confining the victim during the time of removal. Consequently, a confinement is, in effect, necessarily included (i.e., required) for the Kidnapping offenses. Of course, if confinement is not read into removal,⁶¹⁸ then False Imprisonment is not a lesser included offense under the present standard.⁶¹⁹ This is because, under such an interpretation, Kidnapping could be committed in either of two ways while False Imprisonment can only be committed in one way. However, it is doubtful that the Supreme Court will take such a narrow view.

B. *Child Stealing*⁶²⁰

The offense of Child Stealing⁶²¹ supplements the kidnapping offenses "by prohibiting unprivileged acts which are not defined as kidnapping."⁶²² The elements of this crime are: (1) forcibly or fraudulently; (2) taking or enticing away; (3) any "child"⁶²³ (i.e., under fourteen); (4) with the specific intent⁶²⁴ to detain or conceal such child from its lawful custodian; and (5) having knowledge⁶²⁵ of no authority to do so. So defined, this crime differs from Kidnapping⁶²⁶ by not including any of the specific intent requirements of Kidnapping, as well as not requiring confinement of the victim.⁶²⁷ The

618. Some support for this interpretation is strongly implied at J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 14, § 241: "[False Imprisonment] differs from kidnapping in two ways, first, a confinement is required, whereas kidnapping requires either a confinement or a removal of the person of the victim"

gist of this crime thus consists of wrongful usurpation of custody of a child.⁶²⁸ Two minor changes in the revised crime⁶²⁹ include lowering the age of the victim from sixteen to fourteen and eliminating the pre-revised requirement that the taking be done maliciously.⁶³⁰

1. Parental Exception

A major change was made in the revised crime with the addition of an exception exculpating parents or other relatives involved in a dispute over the stolen child's custody, but only when the taking was for the sole purpose of assuming custody of the child.⁶³¹ If neither of these two components, relative of child or specific intent of assuming custody, is absent, then the defense is not applicable. The burden of disproving this defense is apparently upon the state.⁶³²

"This section is directed at the outsider, a person having no color of claim, either legal or moral, to the custody of the child, who usurps the position of the rightful custodian," Professor Yeager explains.⁶³³ However, relatives are not exculpated completely as their conduct can constitute the less serious new offense of Violating a Custodial Order,⁶³⁴ as discussed below.

2. Grading

There is only one grade of Child Stealing. This is a class C felony,⁶³⁵ but is not a "forcible felony."⁶³⁶ In contrast, roughly similar illegal conduct punishable as Kidnapping in the Third Degree,⁶³⁷ also a class C felony, is subject to the special penalties of a "forcible felony."

One major change in the penalty ranges has been made, however. Under the new Criminal Code, a sentencing judge imposing a term of imprisonment is limited to the regular class C felony penalty of an indeterminate term of ten years. Contrastingly, under the pre-revised law, a sentencing judge could, in his judicial discretion, either impose the ten-year term or a one-year term.⁶³⁸ Of course, a sentencing judge can accomplish approximately the same type of alternative "short" term under the new Criminal Code by exercising his right under Code section 902.4 to reconsider the sentence to imprisonment within ninety days (and thus grant "delayed" probation).⁶³⁹

Because Child Stealing is not a "forcible felony,"⁶⁴⁰ unlike all three degrees of Kidnapping, the full range of ameliorative sentencing alternatives (i.e., a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence) is available in lieu of confinement. Moreover, a fair reading of Code section 909.1 authorizes the sentencing judge to impose a sentence of a fine only, instead of being limited to a sentence of confinement or a suspended sentence, once he has determined not to defer judgment or to defer sentencing.⁶⁴¹ Finally, it should be noted that there are no lesser included offenses of this crime.⁶⁴²

C. Violating a Custodial Order

As noted above, a new offense of Violating a Custodial Order⁶⁴³ was added to the Criminal Code to deal more leniently with what heretofore had been punishable as child stealing committed by relatives embroiled in child custody disputes,⁶⁴⁴ instead of treating them under the more serious offense of Child Stealing.⁶⁴⁵ The elements of the most serious of the three modes of committing this general intent offense,⁶⁴⁶ as amended in 1978,⁶⁴⁷ are: (1) any relative; (2) taking a child (i.e., under fourteen); (3) and removing him from Iowa; (4) and concealing the child's whereabouts; (5) without consent of the child's lawful custodian; and (6) in violation of a court order fixing custody of the child in another. This is a class D felony,⁶⁴⁸ but of course, not a "for-

644. "The exception [in the Child Stealing section] was included because the [drafting] Committee felt that the penalty which should be assessed for child stealing in the ordinary case would be entirely inappropriate if applied to a parent or other relative who is involved in a dispute over the child's custody. In these custody disputes, the person so acting is usually concerned with the well-being of the child, and his identity is known. Yeager Note, supra note 52, at 527-28.

cible felony."⁶⁴⁹ Less serious penalties apply to a parent of a child living apart from the other parent who either (1) takes and conceals that child from within the State in violation of a custodial order and without the other parent's consent or (2) conceals that child in violation of a court order granting visitation rights and without the other parent's consent. Both of these offenses are serious misdemeanors.⁶⁵⁰

These provisions certainly are not consistent. The most serious offense covers "any relative," whereas the other two misdemeanor offenses are limited to "a parent." Thus, it appears that wrongful concealment of another's child within the State by a relative of the child other than one of its parents is not criminalized. No logical reason for this casus omissus is apparent. On the other hand, a parent is included under all three offenses, with the key determining factor being whether the child is kept in Iowa or is removed therefrom. At first blush, the significant differential in the penalty schedules for the parent's wrongful act in these three roughly similar instances seems illogical. The gravamen of each of the offenses is the wrongful usurpation of de facto custody, with the mere removal of the child from Iowa seemingly not warranting the penalty jump from a serious misdemeanor to a class D felony. This approach is especially suspect in light of the evolution of the related crime of Kidnapping⁶⁵¹ from its early origins (when removal from the territory was an essential element).⁶⁵² No other crime in Iowa requires removal of the victim from the State as an element of the offense or even considers this factor in grading a multiple-classification offense for sentencing purposes. The harsh reality of current extradition practices appears to be the only logical explanation for making the removal-from-Iowa situation a class D felony. A more sound approach would be to realistically extend the practice of extradition procedures to certain misdemeanors, including this type of activity.

Another apparent inconsistency is that the class D felony expressly applies to a custodial order, whether permanent or temporary in nature. In contrast, one of the serious misdemeanor offenses refers to "a custodial order," without any qualifying language.⁶⁵³ This suggests that the latter offense can only be committed in violation of a permanent custodial order. Otherwise, the phrase "permanently or temporarily" in the class D provision is superfluous. If this interpretation is correct, then another casus omissus arises as there would be no provision covering a parent who violates a temporary custodial order as long as the child is not removed from Iowa.

In the final analysis, the whole offense seems superfluous, except for its

one positive contribution of providing an alternative, less-severe punishment for parents other than that existing under Child Stealing.⁶⁵⁴ These familial child-custody disputes have been, or will continue to be, punishable under contempt of court⁶⁵⁵ for violation of a court's orders granting custody and visitation rights (whether permanent or temporary in nature).

D. False Imprisonment

The new crime of False Imprisonment⁶⁵⁶ consists of these elements: (1) intentionally;⁶⁵⁷ (2) confining another person; (3) against his will; (4) having no reasonable belief of a right or authority to do so. The gravamen of this offense is the illegal confinement. A person is to be considered confined, by terms of the statute, when his "freedom to move about is substantially restricted by force, threat, or deception."⁶⁵⁸

1. Substantiality

The explicit statutory requirement that the restriction upon a person's movement be substantial indicates a legislative intent that False Imprisonment be given a stricter interpretation under the Iowa Criminal Code than under the common law.⁶⁵⁹ That is "a serious interference with another's personal liberty"⁶⁶⁰ appears necessary for a violation of Code section 710.7, as compared with a violation of the common law crime being predicated merely upon "any unlawful restraint of a person's liberty."⁶⁶¹

So interpreted, False Imprisonment would require more than a temporary, albeit intentional, blocking of another's path. Actual, prolonged restraint should be necessary, as, for example, wrongfully locking someone in a room for an appreciable time. Another example would be either to force a person into one's vehicle or to effectively restrain a passenger from alighting (either through force or through making it impractical to alight from a speeding vehicle), in either instance in order to shower unwanted affections on the other. Of course, such an encounter would constitute at least Kidnapping in the Third Degree⁶⁶² if the requisite specific intent of committing sexual abuse could be proved.

2. Mental State

This is not a specific intent⁶⁶³ crime. All that a prosecutor has to prove is that the defendant intentionally⁶⁶⁴ (as opposed to recklessly or negligently)⁶⁶⁵ wrongfully confined another person. The particular purpose for doing so is not material. This lack of a specific intent element is what principally differentiates this offense from the much more serious kidnapping offenses.

3. Reasonable Belief

An essential element of False Imprisonment is that the offender had no reasonable belief that he had a right or any authority to restrain the other person.⁶⁶⁶ This reasonable belief of authority is defined in the Uniform Jury Instructions as "whether the defendant, under the facts and circumstances existing at that time, had reasonable grounds to believe that he did have the authority or right to confine (the victim)."⁶⁶⁷

4. Grading

The single grade of this offense is a serious misdemeanor.⁶⁶⁸ The necessity of this offense at all, especially in light of it being a serious misdemeanor, is questionable. Arguably more serious conduct is punishable under other offenses merely as a simple misdemeanor.⁶⁶⁹ For example, Assault⁶⁷⁰ includes a battery of such a nature as to not qualify under the more serious aggravated assaults.⁶⁷¹ A broken nose is punishable as a simple misdemeanor, whereas mere wrongful confinement without any violence or even threatened violence can be punished as a serious misdemeanor under this offense. The corresponding tort of false imprisonment is a sufficient deterrent to petty wrongful acts of this nature, and the aggravated assaults and kidnapping offenses cover any aggravated instances of False Imprisonment.

IV. WEAPONS AND WEAPONS-RELATED OFFENSES

A. Introduction

1. Gravamen of the Offenses

The new Criminal Code contains multitudinous weapons, weapons-related, and weapons-aggravation offenses⁶⁷² covering a broad spectrum of proscribed conduct constituting the gravamen of the offense(s). The acti rei of these divers offenses range from mere representation of being armed with a firearm⁶⁷³ to discharging a firearm.⁶⁷⁴ Incredibly, the most minor actus reus—that of mere representation of being armed with a firearm—shares in carrying the most onerous penalty.⁶⁷⁵

2. Types of Weapons

No fewer than seven different terms are used in the various weapons and weapons-related offenses. This definitional proliferation is incredulous in light of the so-called “uniform” approach in the new Criminal Code. Of course, the broadest term is “dangerous weapon,”⁶⁷⁶ which fortunately is included in the general definitional chapter (as is the more restrictive term “offensive weapon”).⁶⁷⁷ Surprisingly, two other related weapons terms—i.e., “deadly weapon”⁶⁷⁸ and “firearm”⁶⁷⁹—are not statutorily defined, although both had well-defined meanings under the pre-revised law which control in the absence of any statutory modifications in the new Criminal Code. Three other statutorily-undefined phrases are likewise used in various weapons offenses, viz., “pistol or revolver,” “spring gun,” and “any weapon.”

3. Unloaded Weapons

The majority of the weapons and weapons-related offenses can be committed even though the particular weapon used was unloaded. Additionally, the weapon involved in the five non-weapons offenses with step-up penalties⁶⁸⁰ because of possession or use of weapons during their commission need not be loaded. The Iowa Supreme Court has held that under the new Criminal Code,⁶⁸¹ like under the pre-revised law,⁶⁸² the prosecution "is not required to establish that a pistol was loaded at the time of the offense to prove its character as a dangerous weapon in a prosecution for robbery in the first degree."⁶⁸³ Thus, it was held proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that a pistol is a "dangerous weapon" notwithstanding the lack of any prosecutorial evidence that the pistol was loaded at the time of its use in the robbery.

The particular weapon involved in the following crimes need not be loaded: Assault (by pointing a "firearm" toward another),⁶⁸⁴ Going Armed with Intent,⁶⁸⁵ Possession of Offensive Weapons,⁶⁸⁶ Possession of Firearms or Offensive Weapons by a Felon,⁶⁸⁷ and two of three types of Carrying Weapons.⁶⁸⁸ Contrastingly, one type of Carrying Weapons—viz., going armed with "any loaded firearm of any kind" within a city's limits—expressly requires that the weapon be loaded.⁶⁸⁹ Additionally, the Code contemplates that two other weapons offenses—viz., Terrorism (by discharging a "dangerous weapon")⁶⁹⁰ and Setting a Spring Gun⁶⁹¹—involve loaded weapons.

4. Firearms During Forcible Felonies

The change in weapons law with the greatest impact was the addition of a provision⁶⁹² setting a mandatory⁶⁹³ minimum sentence of five years for possession,⁶⁹⁴ representation of possession,⁶⁹⁵ display,⁶⁹⁶ or use⁶⁹⁷ of a "firearm"⁶⁹⁸ during commission of any "forcible felony."⁶⁹⁹ Read in pari materia with the statutory ban on probation for "forcible felonies," the "firearms" provision means that anyone convicted of a "forcible felony" involving a "firearm" must serve a minimum of five years imprisonment (i.e., no probation and no parole eligibility for at least five years subject, however, to reductions via both good time and honor time). This provision does not create a separate crime, nor does it increase the maximum penalty on the underlying felony conviction. Moreover, its application is limited to involvement of firearms during crimes constituting "forcible felonies."

a. Procedure for Invoking. Two requisite findings to be made beyond a reasonable doubt by the trier of fact are necessary before the minimum five-year sentence can be imposed under section 902.7: "[1] that the person is guilty of a forcible felony and [2] that the person represented he or she possessed a firearm at that time or displayed or was armed with a firearm while participating in the forcible felony."⁷⁰⁰ The supreme court made it clear in *State v. Matlock*⁷⁰¹ that these requisite findings must be made at trial by the trier of fact, when it vacated a sentence imposed under section 902.7 after these findings were incorporated in the sentencing order instead

694. Being in possession of or being armed with a firearm means that the defendant "had a firearm on his person at the time of the offense." UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 220.

695. The representation must be that the defendant (or an accomplice) is "in the immediate possession and control of a firearm" which means to state, or act as if, a firearm were in the defendant's possession. It is not necessary that there actually was a firearm, or that it was shown or displayed. However, there must be such action or statements, by the defendant, as would lead one to reasonably believe the defendant did have a firearm in his possession and control. The belief must be reasonable and may not be founded merely on speculation or conjecture.

UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 222. See State v. Matlock, 289 N.W.2d 625, 629 (Iowa 1980) (trial court's findings of fact in bench trial for Robbery that defendant "put his hands inside his shirt, and said he wanted money" determined upon appeal to be inadequate on this record to justify invocation of section 902.7 by sentencing judge, with case apparently turning on the fact that the fact finder had not made the requisite finding of fact that defendant had represented that he was in possession of a firearm).

696. The displaying of the firearm must be "in a threatening manner" which means to "show or make the existence of a firearm apparent in such a manner as to intimidate the victim." UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 221.

697. An extremely broad spectrum of activity is encompassed in this provision—from mere representation of possession to actual use of a firearm. How these two situations can be equated for purposes of a uniform penalty is not readily clear to this author. This divergence certainly points up the unreasonableness of this being a mandatory sentencing provision.

of being part of the findings and conclusions of the trier of fact.

The Iowa Rules of Criminal Procedure have been amended, effective July 1, 1980, to require a special pleading in the indictment or trial information whenever the state plans to seek invocation of section 902.7.⁷⁰² Similarly, if such an allegation is supported by the evidence at trial, the trial court must submit to the jury a special interrogatory on this matter.⁷⁰³ Of course, in a bench trial the court as the trier of fact would record its findings on this matter in its findings of fact and conclusions of law.

b. Use of Firearm as Element of Underlying Substantive Offense. The spurious claim that the firearm provision is inapplicable when use of a firearm is an element of the underlying substantive offense itself rather than merely incidental to it was rejected outright in State v. Young.⁷⁰⁴ "Section 902.7 makes the use of a firearm in committing a forcible felony equally culpable without regard to whether proof of its use is necessary under the definition of the offense or merely accompanies its commission,"⁷⁰⁵ the supreme court concluded.

c. Complicity. As discussed extensively and critically above,⁷⁰⁶ section 902.7 was interpreted in *State v. Sanders*⁷⁰⁷ as applying to a mere aider and abettor (here, in a Robbery) who did not personally have the firearm. Focusing on the language in section 703.1 that all persons involved in a criminal act shall be "punished as principals," the supreme court noted that this section "deals with both guilt and punishment."⁷⁰⁸

d. Constitutionality. Section 902.7 has already withstood several constitutional challenges. One of these unsuccessful contentions went to the substantive content of the provision itself on the due process ground of void for vagueness.⁷⁰⁹ The other focus of attack has been upon the mandatory feature of the sentence to be imposed under section 902.7, with unsuccessful federal constitutional challenges being based upon grounds of equal protection, due process, cruel and unusual punishment, and separation of powers.⁷¹⁰

5. Step-Up Penalty Schedules

Possession or use of weapons, even without causing any physical injury, is the basis for higher degrees of five crimes. This includes the following four serious felonies which are thereby raised from class C felonies⁷¹¹ to class B felonies:⁷¹² Burglary,⁷¹³ Kidnapping,⁷¹⁴ Robbery,⁷¹⁵ and Sexual Abuse.⁷¹⁶ Accordingly, the corresponding penalty schedule in the form of an indeterminate term of imprisonment is increased from ten years to twenty-five years. More importantly, "armed" burglary becomes a "forcible felony"⁷¹⁷ and thus not subject to the ameliorative sentencing options of a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, or a suspended sentence.⁷¹⁸ Similarly, a fine-only sentence is not authorized for Burglary in the First Degree although it apparently is for Burglary in the Second Degree.⁷¹⁹ On the other hand, the other three aforementioned offenses are "forcible felonies" irrespective of the degree. The fifth offense with weapons causing a step-up penalty schedule—Interference with Official Acts⁷²⁰—involves increasing the basic penalty of a simple misdemeanor⁷²¹ to an aggravated misdemeanor.⁷²² Incredibly, however, pointing a firearm at another is treated merely as one of the alternative modes of committing simple Assault,⁷²³ a simple misdemeanor.

B. Possession of Offensive Weapons

There were no significant changes made in the crime of Possession of Offensive Weapons,⁷²⁴ which makes unlawful knowing possession of offensive weapons by anyone except for certain classes of persons. The scope of the devices or instrumentalities included in the definition of "offensive weapon"⁷²⁵ was broadened, basically being patterned after federal law.⁷²⁶ There also were additions made to the list of persons authorized to possess offensive weapons because of being required or permitted to do so by the duties or lawful activities of such persons.⁷²⁷ One other change is the elimination of the exception for "innocent" possession by a person who finds an offensive weapon. As Professor Yeager cautions, a person finding what appears to be an offensive weapon should "leave it where it is and notify the appropriate police agency."⁷²⁸

Mere possession⁷²⁹ per se is not a crime under this statute, however, since the offender must "knowingly possess an offensive weapon."⁷³⁰ This means, according to Professor Yeager, that the offender must have knowledge both of his possession of the weapon and of the offensive weapon quality, and furthermore that "proof that one knowingly possesses one of these permits an inference that he knows that it is an offensive weapon."⁷³¹

The simple grade of this offense is a class D felony.⁷³² It, of course, is not a "forcible felony."⁷³³

C. Possession of Firearm or Offensive Weapon by Felon

This new crime,⁷³⁴ which is patterned after federal law,⁷³⁵ is comprised of: (1) the act of either possession;⁷³⁶ receiving, transporting, or causing to be transported, (2) a "firearm"⁷³⁷ or an "offensive weapon;"⁷³⁸ (3) by a person previously convicted of a felony (in any state or federal court). It is reasonable to assume that this statute, like the comparable pre-revised Carrying Concealed Weapons statute,⁷³⁹ will be interpreted as requiring an additional element of knowledge⁷⁴⁰ (that a weapon was being possessed, etc.). Moreover, whenever applicable, the state will have to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the offender had not at the time either been pardoned or had his rights restored (by the President or Governor) as well as that he had not been expressly authorized (by the President or Governor) to handle such weapons.⁷⁴¹

What constitutes a "felony" is spelled out in the Code, viz. "any offense punishable in the jurisdiction where it occurred by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year."⁷⁴² The legislature was wise in clearly setting out what it meant by a convicted felon. However, the wisdom of its specific definition can be questioned. As Professor Yeager has noted,⁷⁴³ a due process problem (i.e., of notice) can arise when this section is applied to a person whose conduct constituted a misdemeanor under the prevailing law at the time but which nevertheless carried a penalty of a term of potential imprisonment exceeding one year. The apparent rationale for this definition is a legislative decision that uniform criteria should be applied to persons convicted of a crime serious enough to warrant potential imprisonment in excess of one year, notwithstanding the felony-misdemeanor classification of the crime. Strangely, the legislature in this same Code raised the minimal level of felony criminal conduct to the five-year punishment level.⁷⁴⁴ Concomitantly, it created a new classification of an aggravated misdemeanor, which is punishable by a determinate maximum term of two years imprisonment.⁷⁴⁵ Read in pari materia with the aforementioned definition of a felony, this raises the question of whether an aggravated misdemeanor constitutionally can provide the underlying felony conviction for this offense of Possession of Firearm by Felon.

Two constitutional challenges concerning section 724.26 have already been resolved in favor of the statute. In State v. Rupp,⁷⁴⁶ the supreme court held that this statute is a reasonable regulation of the non-fundamental right to bear arms under the second amendment and that it is not overbroad by including within its prohibition those convicted of non-violent as well as violent felonies. A similar statute has been upheld in Colorado⁷⁴⁷ against a constitutional attack on including non-Colorado convictions as the underlying or predicate felony conviction. The unsuccessful argument was that by permitting federal convictions as well as convictions in other states (in addition, of course, to Colorado) this amounted to legislative delegation to another jurisdiction the power to define Colorado crimes. The court emphasized that the existence of a prior felony conviction is merely a fact to be proved at trial.⁷⁴⁸

The United States Supreme Court has held⁷⁴⁹ that a felon charged under the comparable federal statute cannot contest the validity of the predicate felony conviction. The six-three majority held that "Congress could rationally conclude that any felony conviction, even an allegedly invalid one, is a sufficient basis on which to prohibit the possession of a firearm,"⁷⁵⁰ after determining that the Congressional intent was to "focus not on reliability, but on the mere fact of conviction, or even indictment, in order to keep firearms away from potentially dangerous persons."⁷⁵¹ This decision and underlying rationale is unreasonable, especially in light of the asserted invalidity of the prior felony conviction being violation of the sixth amendment right to counsel. The same legislative-intent justification should apply to recidivist statutes, yet a prior counselless felony conviction in violation of *Gideon v. Wainwright*⁷⁵² cannot—indeed, should not—be used.⁷⁵³

D. Carrying Weapons

The former single-facet crime of Carrying Concealed Weapons⁷⁵⁴ was reconstituted into three types of related conduct comprising the new crime of Carrying Weapons.⁷⁵⁵ The three alternative means of committing this offense are: (1)(a) going armed, (b) with a "dangerous weapon,"⁷⁵⁶ (c) concealed on or about one's person;⁷⁵⁷ or (2)(a) going armed, (b) with a pistol, revolver, or any kind of loaded "firearm,"⁷⁵⁸ (c) within a city's limits;⁷⁵⁹ or (3)(a) knowingly carrying or transporting, (b) a pistol or revolver, (c) in a vehicle.⁷⁶⁰ Of course, these weapons can be carried lawfully, even in the above-mentioned circumstances, provided that one or more of the eight statutory exceptions exists.⁷⁶¹ The state has the burden of negating the application of the exceptions.⁷⁶²

The first alternative is basically a restatement of the former offense prohibiting the carrying of a concealed dangerous weapon anywhere in Iowa. Presumably, former caselaw dealing with the issue of concealment remains viable, with the term "concealed" essentially meaning "not in plain view."⁷⁶³ Moreover, the revised statutory language should not change the pre-revised interpretation requiring proof of conscious or intentional carrying of what was known to be a dangerous weapon,⁷⁶⁴ although this remains merely a general intent crime.⁷⁶⁵

The concept underlying the second alternative is new to Iowa law. Concealment is not an element of this offense, since it is a violation to go armed in any manner with the specified weapons. Note that this crime can only be committed within any city's corporate limits. The philosophy being that "no one should go armed in areas of relatively dense population,"⁷⁶⁶ with the city limits chosen as an effective way for anyone to identify restricted areas. This crime is committed if the individual is armed with a "pistol or revolver" whether or not such weapon is loaded. However, if the charge is based upon carrying a "firearm," other than a pistol or revolver, the prosecution must establish that such weapon was loaded. The reason for this distinction is unclear.

The final alternative represents an expansion of prior law by not being limited to the operator of the vehicle.⁷⁶⁷ The weapon need not be loaded. Finally, the single grade of this offense is an aggravated misdemeanor.⁷⁶⁸

E. Going Armed With Intent

The only change made in the crime of Going Armed with Intent⁷⁶⁹ was to substitute the general terminology of "any dangerous weapon"⁷⁷⁰ for the pre-revised lengthy listing of specific weapons. The practical effect could be unlike in instruction No. 2407 (carrying a dangerous weapon concealed upon person), no mention is made in Uniform Jury Instructions Nos. 2408 (carrying a firearm in a vehicle) and 2409 (carrying a weapon within the city limits) of negating these exceptions as an element of the State's case. This, of course, is an oversight that requires revision of these two instructions.

to include more weapons within the province of this offense.⁷⁷¹

Although this crime is included in the Code chapter on Assaults, an assault is not an element of this crime. Going Armed with Intent is essentially an inchoate attempted murder provision,⁷⁷² applicable in a situation where there is not a sufficient overt act for an Attempted Murder charge.⁷⁷³ Indeed, the crime of Going Armed with Intent even "is complete without any attempt having been made to use the weapon."⁷⁷⁴

Specifically, this crime consists of: (1) going armed;⁷⁷⁵ (2) with a "dangerous weapon;"⁷⁷⁶ (3) with the intent to use it, without justification, against another person. This is a specific intent⁷⁷⁷ crime, thus differentiating it from the crime of Carrying Weapons,⁷⁷⁸ although the prosecution does not have to prove the particular person against whom the defendant intended to use the dangerous weapon.⁷⁷⁹

The single grade of this offense is a class D felony.⁷⁸⁰ However, it is not a "forcible felony."⁷⁸¹ This is because an assault is not a necessary element and thus Going Armed with Intent would not come within the interpretation of a "felonious assault"⁷⁸² in State v. Powers.⁷⁸³

F. Setting Spring Guns and Mantraps

A new crime of Setting Spring Guns and Mantraps⁷⁸⁴ appears in section

See UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 821. The distance that an armed individual has gone from his home is relevant to the element of intent in appropriate cases. This is a matter for the jury, rather than a question of sufficiency of evidence (for a motion for judgement of acquittal). State v. Buchanan, 207 N.W.2d 784 (Iowa 1973).

776. Under the UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 820, the jury is to decide if the particular weapon used by the defendant was a "dangerous weapon," as that term is defined in section 702.7 of the code and in UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 218. 708.9 of the Code, partly in response⁷⁸⁵ to the well-publicized and highly controversial civil liability case of Katko v. Briney.⁷⁸⁶ The elements of this essentially inchoate-type offense are: (1) setting either a spring gun or mantrap; (2) which is intended to be sprung by a person; and (3) which can cause such person "serious injury."⁷⁸⁷ This is a specific intent crime.⁷⁸⁸

The single grade of this offense is an aggravated misdemeanor,⁷⁸⁹ irrespective of whether or not the spring gun or mantrap ever is set off. Unlike several other offenses, this offense thus does not include a built-in higher penalty schedule for firing of the devices or for any resultant personal injury. This singular approach has the desirable effect of avoiding double punishment for any personal injury caused by a spring gun or a mantrap. Of course, any resultant harm caused to a person would be punishable as a separate substantive offense (either as a homicide offense or an aggravated type of assault offense, depending upon the degree of injury and the particular surrounding circumstances).

G. Assault

One mode of committing the simple misdemeanor⁷⁹⁰ crime of Assault⁷⁹¹ is by either intentionally⁷⁹² pointing a "firearm"⁷⁹³ toward another person or displaying in a threatening manner⁷⁹⁴ any "dangerous weapon"⁷⁹⁵ toward another person. There is no requirement that the victim not be aware that it is unloaded.⁷⁹⁶

H. Terrorism

The discharging of certain weapons under certain limited circumstances constitutes one of the two types of Terrorism,⁷⁹⁷ which is included in the chapter on Assault in the new Criminal Code. The elements of this new crime are: (1) discharging a "dangerous weapon;"⁷⁹⁸ (2) at or into any occupied building or vehicle; and (3) placing the occupants thereof in reasonable apprehension⁷⁹⁹ of "serious injury."⁸⁰⁰ Proof of the occupants being placed in actual danger appears unnecessary in light of the fact that the crime only requires that the dangerous weapon be discharged at an occupied building or vehicle.

This offense is a class D felony.⁸⁰¹ Moreover, this particular type of Terrorism has been interpreted⁸⁰² to be a "felonious assault" and thus a "forcible felony."⁸⁰³

I. Miscellaneous Weapons Distribution Offenses

Six minor offenses⁸⁰⁴ relating to permits and unlawful transfers of divers types of weapons also appear in Chapter 724. Unfortunately, the remainder of this chapter is comprised of an elaborate scheme for the administrative function of issuing and recording permits for weapons.⁸⁰⁵ The administrative procedure for issuing weapons permits was not included in the fourth tentative draft of S.F. 85. It was noted in the accompanying commentary: "The suggestion is that such matters ought to be taken out of the criminal code and placed back in that part of the code which deals with the duties of the sheriff as such." The message did not get through, however.

805. Although the permit provisions were included within the pre-revised Criminal Code itself (see IOWA CODE §§ 695.4-.29 (1977) (repealed 1978)), they were omitted in early legislative drafts. As explained in the commentary to the Fourth Tentative Draft of S.F. 85: "The procedure for issuing permits to carry dangerous weapons are [sic] not included in the draft. The suggestion is that such matters ought to be taken out of the criminal code and placed back in that part of the code which deals with the duties of the sheriff as such." Id. at 109.

or revolver to a person without a valid permit)⁸⁰⁶ constitutes the only new offense in this grouping. This new criminalization is wise, as a measure to aid in regulating the proliferation of handguns, although surprisingly it is graded merely as a simple misdemeanor.⁸⁰⁷ Note that this offense cuts both ways, by criminalizing the actions of both the seller and the purchaser. Thus, a legitimate handgun dealer has the duty of ascertaining that a customer has what appears to be a valid permit for the purchase of a handgun. Of course, the seller should not be held strictly liable for fraudulently-obtained permits. However, a seller arguably has a duty of making reasonable inquiry when presented with a permit with alterations on its face as well as a requirement to determine that the prospective purchaser and the permit holder are the same person. Moreover, a seller certainly would be remiss in selling a handgun to a person who falsely alleges to have a valid permit but fails to have it in his possession at the time.⁸⁰⁸

Three pre-revised offenses⁸⁰⁹ were changed, although not substantially. Two others⁸¹⁰ were re-enacted verbatim.

808. IOWA CODE § 724.16 (1979) reads in pertinent part: "[A]ny person who transfers ownership of a pistol or revolver to a person who does not have in his or her possession a valid annual permit to acquire pistols or revolvers is guilty" (emphasis added).

809. The revised crime of Failure to Report Sale or Other Transfer of Firearms, a simple misdemeanor, is "somewhat more limited" than prior law by being limited to pistols and revolvers. IOWA CODE § 724.15 (1979). Cf. IOWA CODE § 695.21 (1977) (repealed 1978). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 534.

The revised crime of Giving False Information When Purchasing Firearms, an aggravated misdemeanor, has been expanded by specifying that it can be committed either through the giving of: (1) a false name; (2) false identification; or (3) other false information. IOWA CODE § 724.21 (1979). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 534. The pre-revised crime was limited to giving of a false or fictitious name. See IOWA CODE § 695.23 (1977) (repealed 1978).

The revised crime of Making Firearms Available to Minors, a simple misdemeanor, is somewhat more extensive than prior law by applying to firearms generally (instead of merely to pistols and revolvers) and by "further delineat[ing] the prohibited conduct." J. ROEHRICK, supra note 81, at 341. See IOWA CODE § 724.22 (1979). Cf. IOWA CODE § 695.26 (1977) (repealed 1978). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 535. Moreover, exceptions were added for minors to have firearms legitimately provided for recreational uses as well as for national guard duties. See id.

810. These two unchanged offenses are Failure of Armed Persons to Carry a Permit, a simple misdemeanor (see IOWA CODE § 724.5 (1979); J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 523) and Making a False Statement in Application for Permit, an aggravated misdemeanor (see IOWA CODE § 724.10 (1979); J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 529).

V. HOMICIDE OFFENSES

A. Murder Offenses

1. Overview

No substantive change was made in what constitutes murder under the Criminal Code, the definition continuing to be the killing of another person "with malice aforethought either express or implied."⁸¹¹ Doubtlessly, there remains "one crime called murder in Iowa,"⁸¹² now defined in section 707.1, and "the degrees of the offense are but graduations of the crime devised to permit punishment to be varied according to circumstances of greater or less enormity characterizing the act."⁸¹³ The major change has been to expand the scope of first degree murder⁸¹⁴ at the expense of the residual offense of second-degree murder.⁸¹⁵ It appears that second-degree murder has also been cut back by the reach of the involuntary manslaughter provision.⁸¹⁶

Malice aforethought⁸¹⁷ remains the specific state of mind necessary to make an unlawful killing, murder, instead of merely manslaughter. It is defined in the the Uniform Jury Instructions as being:

A fixed purpose or design to do some physical harm to another which exists prior to the act committed. It need not exist for any particular length of time and requires only such deliberation as would make a person appreciate and understand the nature of the act and its consequences, as distinguished from an act done in the heat of passion.⁸¹⁸

Malice aforethought may be inferred from the intentional use of a deadly weapon upon the victim.⁸¹⁹ Indeed, willful use of a deadly weapon or other instrument likely to cause death when accompanied by an opportunity to deliberate before it is used has been held to constitute evidence of malice, deliberation, premeditation and intent to kill.⁸²⁰ These mens rea components must be inferred by the fact finder from the totality of circumstances rather than being presumed from the mere use of a deadly weapon.⁸²¹ In State v. Lass,⁸²² the supreme court held that to instruct that an Assault with a Deadly Weapon implies malice and that a presumption of malice aforethought is warranted if death ensues does not place the burden of proving absence of malice upon the defendant. Similarly, it noted therein that an instruction that the presumption of malice "may be overcome by contrary evidence"⁸²³ does not shift the burden of proof to the defendant, because this was only a prima facie fact presumption which was rebuttable.⁸²⁴

Motive for a killing, of course, is not an essential element in a prosecution for murder. Consequently, the supreme court has rejected outright a claim that the senselessness of the particular multiple murders detracted from the state's required showing of deliberation and premeditation, noting that murder is always senseless.⁸²⁵ Nevertheless, the court has stated that the absence of a motive "may be considered in determining whether an assailant acted with malice aforethought."⁸²⁶

2. First Degree Murder

The Criminal Code retains the traditional language of "willfully, deliberately, and with premeditation"⁸²⁷ as aggravating elements making a killing done with malice aforethought first-degree murder. It did eliminate, however, the archaic phraseology making a killing first-degree murder if "perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait."⁸²⁸ Of course, this deletion is inconsequential since such a killing falls within the traditional elements retained in the Criminal Code as a willful, deliberate and premeditated killing with malice aforethought.

Three other types of murder are considered to be in the first degree under the new Criminal Code. These include two entirely new concepts—killings during an escape or attempted escape⁸²⁹ from lawful custody and most (but not all) killings by prisoners.⁸³⁰ Additionally, the third type, the felony murder rule,⁸³¹ underwent considerable revision. Each of these three circumstances merely substitutes for premeditation, but not for malice aforethought. The fact that the word "kills" is used in each of the four subsections in the revised Code does not portend a change in Iowa law that has required malice aforethought as an element of murder (whether of the first or second degree) even under the felony murder rule.⁸³² This is because the first main section in the first degree murder statute refers to "murder,"⁸³³ which term has been previously defined as killing another person with malice aforethought.⁸³⁴

a. Premeditation. A so-called "straight" first-degree murder occurs when the killing is done "with malice aforethought, willfully, deliberately, premeditatedly and with a specific intent to kill."⁸³⁵ "Willfully" means "intentional or by fixed design or purpose and not accidental,"⁸³⁶ or a killing "done intentionally and without legal justification."⁸³⁷ To "deliberate" is "to weigh in one's mind, to consider, to contemplate, or to reflect."⁸³⁸ To "premeditate" is "to think or ponder upon a matter before acting."⁸³⁹ Absent a specific intent to kill, a "straight" murder would be only of the second degree⁸⁴⁰ (at least when the murder is not also committed during a forcible felony, escape or attempted escape or by a prisoner).⁸⁴¹

Deliberation and premeditation may not be presumed, but instead are subject merely to a permissive inference to be drawn or rejected by the fact finder.⁸⁴² Nevertheless, neither needs to exist "for any particular length of time before the act."⁸⁴³ For example, in finding deliberation and premeditation a jury may consider the fact that the defendant selected a deadly weapon with an opportunity to deliberate (even for a short time) as to where he will use it thereafter in a deadly manner.⁸⁴⁴

Deliberation and premeditation can be shown by circumstantial evidence through, for example: "(1) evidence of planning activity of the defendant which was directed toward the killing; (2) evidence of motive which might be inferred from prior relationships between defendant and the victim; and (3) evidence regarding the nature of the killing."⁸⁴⁵ All three of these are not necessary, however, in making a requisite showing of premeditation.⁸⁴⁶

b. Felony Murder Rule. Killing another person during participation in a "forcible felony" constitutes Murder in the First Degree.⁸⁴⁷ This substitution of the phrase "forcible felony"⁸⁴⁸ for the five enumerated crimes under the pre-revised law has changed the felony murder rule in several respects, all of which are discussed extensively in individual sections of this Article.⁸⁴⁹

The felony murder doctrine "must be based on a causally related felony and acts causing death."⁸⁵⁰ The requisite causal relationship between the underlying felony and the death can be shown even though the deadly assault had been completed before the underlying felony occurred.⁸⁵¹ A causal relationship was found in *State v. Taylor*⁸⁵² where the evidence established that defendant had gone into a tavern with the intent to rob, was rifling the cash register when the operator returned, and then fatally assaulted the operator "in order to effect his escape and avoid later identification."⁸⁵³ The operator's purse also was taken, which presumably was the basis of the felony murder application, since rifling a cash register in the absence of anyone else would constitute mere Theft, the court's unfortunate reference to defendant's robbing the place notwithstanding.

c. Escape. One of the two new types of first-degree murder provided for in the new Criminal Code is a killing during an escape or attempted escape from lawful custody.⁸⁵⁴ The elements are: (1) killing any person (2) with malice aforethought⁸⁵⁵ (3) while either escaping or attempting to escape⁸⁵⁶ (4) from lawful custody.

d. *Killings by Inmates.*⁸⁵⁷ The other completely new type of first degree murder can only be committed by an inmate who is at the time imprisoned⁸⁵⁸ in a state, county, or city correctional facility. The victim must be 855. See text accompanying notes 817-26 supra. But see J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 140, as to possible problems in implying malice when the particular grade of the underlying escape or attempted escape is merely a misdemeanor.

856. Regarding what constitutes an escape, see IOWA CODE § 719.4 (1979). See also UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 711.

857. IOWA CODE § 707.2(4) (1979). See UNIFORM JURY INSTRUCTIONS, supra note 12, at No. 712; J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 141.

858. Because of the express, restrictive statutory language, "[t]he person intentionally kills . . . while such person is imprisoned. . . ." IOWA CODE § 707.2(4) (1979), it is clear that offenders free on bail, probation, or parole are not covered. Whether inmates who intentionally kill while on work release or under custodial hospitalization or while being transported from either a peace officer, correctional officer, public employee, or hostage—but not another inmate (except when the latter is killed while being held hostage).

Only *intentional*⁸⁵⁹ killings are included under the express terms of the statute itself.⁸⁶⁰ Thus, the malice aforethought component will be satisfied by actual proof of the man-endangering state of mind of an intent to kill, but without requiring deliberation and premeditation.

Of course, an unintentional killing of a prison guard by an inmate could still constitute Murder in the First Degree if done under either of the other two above-mentioned circumstances (other than premeditation). Otherwise, such a killing would constitute either second degree murder⁸⁶¹ if done with malice aforethought or if not then Involuntary Manslaughter.⁸⁶² Murder in the First Degree is a class A felony.⁸⁶³

3. Second Degree Murder

a. Generally. The pre-revised Code concept of second-degree murder⁸⁶⁴ being statutorily defined as a residual provision was retained in the new Criminal Code. Therefore, Murder in the Second Degree⁸⁶⁵ is all other murder which is not Murder in the First Degree. This includes deaths caused either intentionally or unintentionally, with malice aforethought being based upon: (a) intent to inflict serious bodily injury (but the victim nevertheless died); or (b) a depraved heart (i.e., intentional doing of an un-called-for act in callous disregard of its likely harmful effects on others); or (d) intentional “felony murders” involving felonies other than forcible felonies or escape (or attempted escape). The supreme court has stated that the absence of a specific intent to kill reduces an unlawful killing with malice aforethought from first degree murder to second degree murder.⁸⁶⁶

b. Felony Murder Rule. The scope of the application of the felony

one place of confinement to another are covered is not clear. See J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 141. Certainly these latter circumstances all fit within the obvious legislative intent to discourage killings by prisoners under any circumstances. It would be unreasonable to apply this provision to prisoner X who is either in his cell or at least somewhere within the penitentiary or jail at the time of the killing but not to his cellmate Y who was temporarily hospitalized in a private facility, but still in custody. A better statutory approach would have been to specify that the offender “is in custody” rather than “is imprisoned” at the time of the killing.

murder rule to second-degree murder has been sharply curtailed in the new Criminal Code in two respects. First, as already discussed above,⁸⁶⁷ the scope of the first-degree felony murder rule has been broadened considerably. Secondly, the new Code created a separate crime of Involuntary Manslaughter⁸⁶⁸ based upon unintentionally causing deaths during the commission of public offenses other than "forcible felonies" and escape (or attempted escape). Thus, accidental second-degree felony murder⁸⁶⁹ is no longer recognized in Iowa, in contravention of common law. This crime is a class B felony,⁸⁷⁰ and more importantly, it is a "forcible felony."⁸⁷¹

4. Attempted Murder

The separate crime of Attempted Murder⁸⁷² consists of these elements: (1) without justification, (2) doing an act expected to set in motion a force or chain of events which will cause or result in the death of another person, (3) with the intent to cause such death.⁸⁷³ In essence, the state has to prove the concurrence of the requisite overt act and a specific intent to kill,⁸⁷⁴ and additionally has to negate justification for the intended homicide.⁸⁷⁵

a. Overt Act. The overt act requirement embodied in this provision (viz. "does any act by which he or she expects to set in motion a force or chain of events which will cause or result in the death of such other person")⁸⁷⁶ is quite different than the prevailing common law standard followed by the Iowa Supreme Court:

The overt act must reach far enough towards the accomplishment, toward the desired result, to amount to the commencement of the consummation, not merely preparatory. It need not be the last proximate act to the consummation of the offense attempted to be perpetrated, but it must approach sufficiently near it to stand either as the first or some subsequent step in a direct movement towards the commission of the offense after the preparations are made. Whenever the design of a person to commit crime is clearly shown, slight acts done in furtherance of that design will constitute an attempt⁸⁷⁷

tion a chain of events designed to cause or result in death could have the effect of criminalizing mere preparatory conduct as opposed to minimally requiring some prepetrating act. Such an approach would fly in the face of accepted common law principles as well as common sense. Indeed, the very essence of such less severe offenses as Going Armed With Intent,⁸⁷⁸ Administering Harmful Substances,⁸⁷⁹ and Setting Spring Guns and Mantraps⁸⁸⁰ appears to be criminalizing dangerous conduct which nevertheless does not constitute Attempted Murder.⁸⁸¹ Professor Yeager's interpretation seems correct in determining that mere preparation is insufficient since what is required is that the act "do whatever is necessary, in the light of the facts as he perceives them, to bring about the death of another—pull the trigger, strike out with the knife, put poison into food which the other is expected to ingest, or the like."⁸⁸² Thus, either merely purchasing or arming oneself with a firearm, knife, or poison would not be sufficient to satisfy the overt act requirement for the serious offense of Attempted Murder.

b. Impossibility as Defense. A specific provision is included in the Attempted Murder section⁸⁸³ which seemingly makes it clear that impossibility is not a defense to this charge. However, the proviso is included in the statute that the actor's expectations must not have been unreasonable in the light of the facts known to the actor. The emphasis is thus placed on the expectations accompanying the overt act with a requirement, however, that those expectations be reasonable. As Professor Yeager recognizes, "[i]f it is unreasonable to expect that the acts will cause the death of another, there is some doubt that death was intended."⁸⁸⁴ The upshot of this requisite reasonableness seemingly is to detract from the requisite specific intent to kill.

c. Grading. Attempted Murder, a class C felony,⁸⁸⁵ has been interpreted as being a "forcible felony,"⁸⁸⁶ and thus the ameliorative sentencing options of a deferred judgment, a deferred sentence, and a suspended sentence are not available.⁸⁸⁷ In State v. Powers,⁸⁸⁸ the supreme court held that the term "felonious assault"⁸⁸⁹ in the definitional clause on "forcible felony"⁸⁹⁰ includes "any assault the commission of which constitutes a felony,"⁸⁹¹ and that Attempted Murder is a felony which necessarily includes an assault.⁸⁹² The court thus rejected defendant's claim that the term "felonious assault" was limited to "those felonies listed in the assault chapter"⁸⁹³ (while Attempted Murder is included in the homicide chapter).

B. Manslaughter Offenses

1. Overview

The generic definition of Manslaughter as an unlawful killing of another person without malice aforethought has remained unchanged from pre-revised law⁸⁹⁴ (including the common law derivation). Unlike the pre-revised law, however, the new Criminal Code contains its own statutory definitions of this crime instead of merely incorporating the common law by reference.⁸⁹⁵ Nevertheless, the statutory definitions essentially follow the common law, as discussed below.

Unlike the singular crime of Manslaughter under the pre-revised law, the revised crime is split into Voluntary⁸⁹⁶ and Involuntary Manslaughter.⁸⁹⁷ The key difference is that the former is an intentional killing whereas the latter is an unintentional killing. Additionally, Involuntary Manslaughter is further divided into two grades—the more serious being of the unlawful act type and the less serious being based upon something akin to criminal negligence.⁸⁹⁸

2. Voluntary Manslaughter

The elements of Voluntary Manslaughter⁸⁹⁹ in essence are: (1) intentionally⁹⁰⁰ and (2) without justification; (3) causing the death of another person;⁹⁰¹ (4) solely by reason of passion (5) resulting from serious provocation;

901. "The 'killing' required for murder is essentially equivalent to the 'causing death' required for involuntary manslaughter It is an element of causation in both crimes. It requires that the defendant did some act which resulted in the victim's death It is not essential for conviction in all cases that the accused actively participated in the immediate physical impetus of death." State v. Marti, 290 N.W.2d 570, 579 (Iowa 1980) (citations omitted).

and (6) without a reasonable cooling-off period. Absent such circumstances of passion, this intentional killing would, of course, constitute murder.⁹⁰² The passion must be "sudden, violent, and irresistible" in nature,⁹⁰³ and must result from a "serious provocation" (that is, "conduct that would excite, in a reasonable person" such a passion.⁹⁰⁴ Nevertheless, as spelled out in the Uniform Jury Instructions:

Regardless of how sudden, violent and irresistible the passion may be, if there is an interval of time during which a reasonable person would, under the circumstances, have time to reflect and bring his passion under control, or, in other words, there is a sufficient time for a person of ordinary reason and temperament to regain his control and suppress the impulse to kill, then the act of the defendant was not committed solely by reason of passion caused by a "serious provocation."⁹⁰⁵

This offense is a class C felony.⁹⁰⁶ It appears to be a "forcible felony."⁹⁰⁷

By statute,⁹⁰⁸ this offense is made a lesser included offense⁹⁰⁹ in a prosecution for murder in the first⁹¹⁰ or second degree.⁹¹¹ Of course, this statutory provision merely satisfies the legal test for a lesser included offense and the evidence in the record of the case still must be examined to determine if the factual test is met.⁹¹² Moreover, Involuntary Manslaughter⁹¹³ is made a lesser included offense of Voluntary Manslaughter under the same circumstances of requiring an independent factual basis.⁹¹⁴

3. Involuntary Manslaughter

There are two grades of Involuntary Manslaughter.⁹¹⁵ Both types, however, involve unintentional,⁹¹⁶ but unjustifiable, killings.

The more serious grade, a class D felony,⁹¹⁷ is based upon the commission of an underlying unlawful act that results in the death of a human being. The elements, as set out in the Code,⁹¹⁸ include: (1) unintentionally and (2) without justification (3) causing the death of a human being⁹¹⁹ (4) during the commission of a public offense other than a "forcible felony" or escape (or attempted escape). However, the supreme court in *State v. Conner*⁹²⁰ interpreted the legislative intent in this provision to also require a showing of recklessness⁹²¹ on the part of the offender.

The less serious grade, an aggravated misdemeanor,⁹²² is based strictly upon recklessness as the state of mind of the offense. The elements, as set out in the Code, are: (1) unintentionally and (2) without justification (3) causing the death of a human being (4) through commission of an act "in a manner likely to cause death or serious injury."⁹²³ The latter phrase, which was left undefined in the Criminal Code, has been interpreted by the supreme court in *State v. Conner*⁹²⁴ to mean recklessly. Moreover, the Court ruled that recklessness, for the purposes of this statute, requires that the offender had "an awareness of the risk or at least that the accused should have been aware of the risk."⁹²⁵

Aiding and abetting another to commit suicide has been interpreted⁹²⁶ to satisfy this provision, and thus it is not error for the trial court to refuse to instruct the jury that suicide is not a defense to a charge of Involuntary Manslaughter. In State v. Marti,⁹²⁷ the defendant admitted putting three bullets in the gun, rotating the cylinder, firing twice on empty chambers, and setting the weapon down uncocked within arm's reach of the bedridden suicide victim. "[P]reparing and providing a weapon for one who is unable to do so and is known to be intoxicated and probably suicidal are acts 'likely to cause death or serious injury' "⁹²⁸ within the provision on involuntary manslaughter, the supreme court concluded. On the other hand, *State v. Conner*⁹²⁹ held that mere disobedience of a signal light during operation of a motor vehicle in the absence of recklessness—does not constitute the underlying basis for Involuntary Manslaughter.

The requisite act for this grade of Involuntary Manslaughter (which is based upon recklessness) was defined in *State v. Inger*⁹³⁰ as being "an act that is not a public offense as defined in section 707.5(1)"⁹³¹ the latter being the unlawful act grade of Involuntary Manslaughter. The importance of this distinction was made apparent in Inger, since "the only possible act attributable to the defendant" that was likely to cause death or serious injury was "an assault, a public offense within the meaningful of section 707.5(1)."⁹³² Because the factual basis was not met for submitting a lesser included offense instruction,⁹³³ the trial court thus correctly refused to instruct on Involuntary Manslaughter in this prosecution for second-degree murder. The legal test component of the lesser included offense standard, on the other hand, is satisfied in the statute itself, with Involuntary Manslaughter made a lesser included offense in a prosecution for murder in the first⁹³⁴ or second degree⁹³⁵ or for Voluntary Manslaughter.⁹³⁶

VI. GOVERNMENTAL PROCESS OFFENSES

A. Offenses Against the Government

Six offenses, including three new crimes and three other expanded crimes, are included in the chapter 718 offenses of the Code directed against governmental agencies and employees.^{936.1} The principal change, however, is the elimination of Treason⁹³⁷ as a crime cognizable under Iowa law. As Professor Yeager explains, Treason is an offense of concern only to the United States and "[i]n the modern context, treason against the state of Iowa is not a viable concept."⁹³⁸ Professor Schantz adds that "the venerable offense of treason [was] replaced by a narrower prohibition against insurrection."⁹³⁹

1. Insurrection

The revised crime of Insurrection,⁹⁴⁰ which combines into one offense the two former crimes of Inciting Insurrection⁹⁴¹ and Inciting Hostilities,⁹⁴² has been broadened to include interference with or disruption of any subdivision of government (rather than being limited to State government itself, as under previous law). Another change requires a minimum of three persons acting in concert to commit this offense, the rationale being that this is "the point at which activity of this type begins to pose a special threat because of the number of persons involved."⁹⁴³ The most drastic change, however, is in the focus of the conduct underlying this offense. Previously, the gravamen of the offense was incitement (via writing, speaking, etc.), whereas the new focus is placed upon physical violence or disruption.⁹⁴⁴ The requirement of the actual use of "physical violence against persons or property"⁹⁴⁵ means that mere passive conduct (e.g., a sit-in demonstration) will not be punishable under this crime, notwithstanding the conduct's disruptive effect.⁹⁴⁶ This also means that a disruptive activity accompanied by a threat of physical violence will not suffice. Other less serious offenses (e.g., Willful Disturbance⁹⁴⁷ and Harassment of Public Officers and Employees)⁹⁴⁸ encompass this type of activity.

The mens rea of the revised crime is stated in the alternative: specifically, with the purpose of disrupting the state government of any subdivision thereof or of preventing a governmental body or officer thereof from performing a lawful function. Thus, it follows that this is a specific intent crime.⁹⁴⁹

There is only one grade of this crime. It is a class C felony,⁹⁵⁰ but is not a "forcible felony."⁹⁵¹ In contrast, the related pre-revised offense of Treason⁹⁵² was punishable by life imprisonment without parole or probation.

2. Impersonating a Public Official

The offense of Impersonating a Public Official⁹⁵³ represents an expansion of the prior law⁹⁵⁴ (which was basically limited to law enforcement and judicial officers) to include any elected or appointed official of any governmental subdivision. According to Professor Yeager, this crime does not encompass "innocent mistakes" and the statutory language "implies knowledge⁹⁵⁵ of the falsity or at least the lack of any reasonable belief that one has the authority which he assumes to exercise."⁹⁵⁶ The gravamen of this offense is the act of impersonation or mere pretense, and thus another person need not be defrauded, nor need there even be such a purpose.⁹⁵⁷ This crime is an aggravated misdemeanor.⁹⁵⁸

3. Willful Disturbance

The new crime of Willful Disturbance⁹⁵⁹ was created to deal with intentional disturbances of governmental deliberative bodies. The elements are: (1) willfully;⁹⁶⁰ (2) disturbing; (3) any governmental deliberative body; (4) with the purpose⁹⁶¹ of either (a) disrupting the function of such body by tumultuous behavior or (b) coercing by force or attempted force any official conduct or proceeding.

The gravamen of this offense, a serious misdemeanor,⁹⁶² is disturbing a government agency, whereas the separate and less serious offense of Harassment of Public Officers and Employees,⁹⁶³ also a simple misdemeanor, covers disruptive conduct directed toward the personnel of such an agency. Whether or not a single act which violates both of these sections can support two separate convictions is an open question. Unlike the more serious crime of Insurrection,⁹⁶⁴ Willful Disturbance does not require multiple defendants or physical violence.

The phrase "tumultuous behavior," which has been criticized by Professor Schantz,⁹⁶⁵ is not defined in the Code. Professor Yeager suggests the use of its ordinary meaning, namely "a noisy uproar, with violence or undertones of violence, be adopted."⁹⁶⁶

4. Harrassment of Public Officers and Employees

A new crime⁹⁶⁷ of Harrassment of Public Officers and Employees⁹⁶⁸ encompasses any act willfully⁹⁶⁹ done, or attempted, with the purpose⁹⁷⁰ of preventing public personnel from performing their duties. Success is not required, nor is violence.⁹⁷¹

The victims of this offense can only be public personnel, and then only when they are on duty or attempting to be on duty. The general crime of Harrassment in Code section 708.7, on the other hand, provides that any person can be the victim. However, the scope of prohibited activity under this general offense is much narrower, being limited to the statutory enumeration. Both harrassment offenses are simple misdemeanors.⁹⁷²

5. Falsifying Public Documents

The crime of Falsifying Public Documents⁹⁷³ consists of a consolidation of four pre-revised statutes,⁹⁷⁴ with two significant changes. One change is that the gravity of the level of mens rea has been lowered considerably, with the elimination of fraudulent intent, leaving this a general intent crime.⁹⁷⁵

The prosecution need now only prove that a public document⁹⁷⁶ was falsified by a person "having no right or authority to do so." The other change is that the mere act of possessing a seal or counterfeit seal of any governmental body is made a crime, whereas the criminal act under the applicable pre-revised statute⁹⁷⁷ consisted of the consummated offense of counterfeiting. This offense is a "non-forcible" class D felony.⁹⁷⁸

6. False Reports

The substantive nature of the general⁹⁷⁹ intent crime of False Reports to Law Enforcement Authorities⁹⁸⁰ was not changed from that of the applicable pre-revised statutes.⁹⁸¹ The newly-consolidated crime encompasses making false reports to a fire department or a law enforcement authority as well as falsely reporting a crime. This crime, a simple misdemeanor,⁹⁸² overlaps with two other more serious crimes—Making False Bomb Reports⁹⁸³ and Malicious Prosecution⁹⁸⁴—as well as with Harrassment,⁹⁸⁵ also a simple misdemeanor.

B. Offenses Relating to Interference with the Judicial Process

Six offenses "concerned with the protection of the judicial process"⁹⁸⁶ are included in chapter 720 of the Code.⁹⁸⁷ Only one of these, Malicious Prosecution,⁹⁸⁸ is entirely new. Four of the five other offenses were revised and consolidated into this chapter. Only the crime of Compounding a Felony⁹⁸⁹ was included unchanged as to substantive content, being modified only by providing for a simple penalty schedule. tations or Records or Process⁹⁹¹—were not substantially changed, and are not further discussed in this Article.

1. Malicious Prosecution

A new crime of Malicious Prosecution,⁹⁹² a serious misdemeanor,⁹⁹³ was added to the new Code. The elements include: (1) causing or attempting to cause another to be prosecuted; (2) while having no reasonable cause for believing that person committed the offense.⁹⁹⁴ Presumably, the state would also have to prove that the prosecution thereof was undertaken maliciously,⁹⁹⁵ in light of the crime being titled "Malicious Prosecution" in the section heading. The problem, however, is that the word "maliciously" is not used in the text of the section itself. Otherwise, this would be a general intent crime.⁹⁹⁶

One thing that is clear about this new crime is that the attempt need not be successful in order to be prosecutable. However, as Professor Yeager points out, "a mere false accusation of crime, unless made under circumstances which can reasonably be expected to lead to prosecution, will not be sufficient."⁹⁹⁷ Of course, filing a criminal complaint unequivocally demonstrates the intent to have another prosecuted, but such act "is not a requirement" to fulfill a Malicious Prosecution charge.⁹⁹⁸

This is an aggravated misdemeanor, which is punishable by either a determinate term of confinement not to exceed two years or a maximum fine of $5000 or both. 2. Perjury

The crime of Perjury⁹⁹⁹ was enlarged substantially in the new Code. Unlike the pre-revised offense¹⁰⁰⁰ which was limited to false statements of material facts made under oath in an official proceeding requiring sworn statements, the new offense also includes the making of false denials under similar circumstances as well as the making of contradictory statements. The addition of both of these new modes of committing Perjury will strengthen the sanctity of the judicial process by serving notice that a witness can get into serious trouble for other kinds of falsification other than merely making false affirmative statements, it will not be necessary for the prosecution to prove which of the two (or more) contradictory statements were untrue. Rather, as Professor Yeager points out, the prosecution need only prove that "one of the statements must necessarily be false, and that the person making the statements knew that he was falsely testifying when the false statements was made."¹⁰⁰¹ Specifically, the elements of a false statement type of Perjury are: (1) while under oath or affirmation; (2) knowingly;¹⁰⁰² (3) making a false statement of fact; (4) such fact was material. The elements of false-denial Perjury are: (1) while under oath or affirmation; (2) falsely denying knowledge of a fact; (3) such fact was material.

The elements of the contradictory statement type of Perjury are: (1) while under oath or affirmation; (2) making contradictory statements; (3) knowing¹⁰⁰³ that one or the other was false; (4) both statements made during the three-year statute of limitations period.

a. Oath. "Material"¹⁰⁰⁴ false testimony must have been given under oath (or affirmation) in order for it to be punishable as Perjury. The form of the oath is immaterial, as long as it signifies a binding of conscience to tell the truth.¹⁰⁰⁵ A Perjury defendant's "sworn" false statements must have been made pursuant to an oath required (or authorized)¹⁰⁰⁶ by law. Therefore, a false affidavit given pursuant to a "gratuitous oath" cannot be the basis for a Perjury prosecution.¹⁰⁰⁷

b. Materiality. The false testimony must have been "material" in order to be punishable under the perjury statute.¹⁰⁰⁸ The legal test for determining materiality under Iowa caselaw is stated in the disjunctive, viz. an otherwise perjurious statement is material if it directly or circumstantially either: (1) supports or attacks a witness' credibility; or (2) has a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove some relevant fact irrespective of the main fact at trial; or (3) is capable of influencing the court or tribunal on any proper matter of inquiry.¹⁰⁰⁹ It is sufficient that the perjured testimony was material to any collateral inquiry during the official proceeding and thus it need not be material to the principal issue at hand.¹⁰¹⁰ Moreover, a perjurer need not have known that his false testimony was material, but instead only that the testimony was false.¹⁰¹¹

"Materiality" is a question of law to be decided by the trial court.¹⁰¹² This, of course, means that materiality is not included as an element in jury instructions. Rather, the procedural context in determining sufficiency of the prosecution's showing of materiality occurs upon defendant's motion for judgment of acquittal. Nevertheless, opinion evidence is admissible on the issue of materiality.¹⁰¹³

The materiality of known false testimony must be affirmatively proved by the prosecution, rather than presuming materiality from the mere fact that false testimony has been shown to have been given under oath. Nevertheless, it appears that the required materiality of the false statement may be demonstrated by its effect. In State v. Fisher,¹⁰¹⁴ it was noted that a false statement during a sentencing hearing "resulted in permitting defendant to withdraw a guilty plea and to have a jury trial which, at that point, he had waived."¹⁰¹⁵

c. Facts. A change in terminology in the statutory definition of Perjury could have the effect of significantly curtailing the scope of the Perjury statute. Whereas the pre-revised law referred in broad terms to false statements concerning any material "matter,"¹⁰¹⁶ the new Criminal Code covers only upon defendant by the prosecution as a condition precedent to defendant obtaining a polygraph examination that he had requested, his conviction for perjury was reversed because of the "gratuitous oath").

false statements of material "facts."¹⁰¹⁷ In State v. Deets,¹⁰¹⁸ "[a] false statement of opinion or belief" was deemed "sufficient to support a charge of perjury" under the pre-revised law.¹⁰¹⁹ Now, Perjury will be limited to a false statement of "fact."

d. Mens Rea. Perjury clearly is not a strict liability¹⁰²⁰ crime. Indeed, the false testimony must be given intentionally¹⁰²¹ with knowledge¹⁰²² of its falsity, rather than "in the honest belief that it is true, or by mistake or inadvertence."¹⁰²³

A "good" motive does not vitiate the general mental responsibility or capacity for a willful or intentional act of perjury. As a New York court has pointed out: that the ultimate object to be attained by the perjury may be beneficial or indifferent in no way absolves or qualifies the criminality of the act. One may not commit a crime because he hopes or expects that good will come of it.¹⁰²⁴

e. Specific Result. The gist of the crime of Perjury is the intentional giving of false testimony, without any requirement of a specific result. Thus, it is still Perjury although the false testimony was not believed and thus could have had no influence.¹⁰²⁵ Likewise, it is immaterial to the question of criminal responsibility for Perjury that the case in which the perjured testimony was given was subsequently reversed on appeal.¹⁰²⁶

f. Quantitative Evidence Rule. Iowa follows the quantitative evidence rule in requiring that the falsity of the allegedly perjurious statement be established upon more than the word of one state's witness. This does not mean, however, that at least two witnesses must testify that defendant's statements were false.¹⁰²⁷ Rather, this rule is satisfied either by two such witnesses or by only one witness whose testimony as to falsity is buttressed by

If a man is honestly mistaken as to the existence of a fact which he affirms to exist, under oath, he cannot be convicted of perjury upon a mere showing that the fact was other than was stated by him under oath."

other corroborative evidence.¹⁰²⁸

g. Grading. All three forms of Perjury are punishable equally. The only grade of this offense is a class D felony.¹⁰²⁹ It, of course, is not a "forcible felony."¹⁰³⁰

h. Defense of Retraction. Another new feature in the Perjury statute is the retraction defense. Retraction of the false statement excuses the maker thereof from Perjury if the retraction is made "in the course of the proceedings where it was made before the false statement has substantially affected the proceedings."^{1030.1}

Presumably, this is an affirmative defense in which counsel for the defense must assume the burden of proving an effective retraction. Because the opportunity for retracting or recanting is unusual in criminal law, this defense "will no doubt be strictly construed," in Professor Yeager's estimation.¹⁰³¹

i. Attorney—Client Privilege. That a perjurious attorney cannot excuse his false testimony under oath on the basis of the attorney-client privilege was made clear in State v. Gartin.¹⁰³² In Gartin, the supreme court deemed it Perjury for the attorney-defendant to testify falsely that he had no knowledge concerning the matters under investigation even though it was true that any such knowledge had been gained through the attorney-client privilege. The proper approach, stated the court, would have been to claim the attorney-client privilege for refusing to testify at all.

3. Suborning Perjury

Suborning Perjury¹⁰³³ is an independent crime, separate from the target crime of Perjury. The thrust of this specific intent¹⁰³⁴ crime is to persuade someone else to commit Perjury.¹⁰³⁵ There are two alternative means of committing this crime: inducing either the making of false statements or the concealing of material facts. The elements of the false statement alternative are: (1) either procuring another person or offering an inducement to another person; (2) to make a statement under oath; (3) in an official proceeding; (4) with the intent that such person make a false statement. The elements of the concealing material facts alternative are: (1) either procuring another person or offering an inducement to another person; (2) who is reasonably believed will be called to testify under oath; (3) to conceal material facts known to such other person. So defined, this revised crime combines the two separate pre-revision crimes of Suborning Perjury¹⁰³⁶ and Attempting to Suborn,¹⁰³⁷ thus rendering the substantive consummated and attempted offenses equally punishable. The revised crime is also broader than the pre-revised offenses in two respects. Because "the act which is solicited must be one which would be perjury,"¹⁰³⁸ the scope of this offense has been expanded with the expansion of what constitutes perjury.¹⁰³⁹ Moreover, the revised definition of Suborning Perjury, unlike its predecessor, includes the act of procuring another "to conceal material facts known to such person."¹⁰⁴⁰

For Suborning Perjury it is unnecessary for the person being procured to have been subpoenaed to testify. It is necessary, however, that the procurer-defendant believe that the solicited testimony is false and that he intend that the false or concealed testimony be given with guilty knowledge of the solicited person.¹⁰⁴¹ However, it appears that under this statute it is no defense that the "procured" witness knew his statements were true although the procurer-defendant believed they were false.¹⁰⁴²

Like the consummated target offense of Perjury,¹⁰⁴³ this inchoate offense is punishable as a class D felony. Suborning Perjury, of course, is not a "forcible felony,"¹⁰⁴⁴ as is Perjury. Although this is a specific solicitation statute, nevertheless there are no different penal consequences, since it also is a class D felony under the general solicitation statute¹⁰⁴⁵ to solicit the commission of any felony.

4. Compounding a Felony

The elements of the unchanged crime of Compounding a Felony¹⁰⁴⁶ are: (1) with knowledge of another's commission of a felony; (2) receiving any consideration; (3) upon a promise to either (a) conceal such crime or (b) not to prosecute or (c) not to give evidence of such crime. The gist of this general intent¹⁰⁴⁷ crime is the promise or agreement. Thus, Compounding a Felony does not occur if, for example, a thief returns stolen property or gives some other thing of value to either the theft victim or a third party, merely hoping that this will discourage prosecution—as long as there is no agreement.¹⁰⁴⁸ On the other hand, the closely analogous situation of compromising a crime¹⁰⁴⁹ is legal. That is, the victim of a crime or of some other wrongful act may legally accept compensation or restitution for his injury or damage—even directly from the criminal himself. Compounding the crime occurs only when this compensation or restitution is in exchange for, or conditioned upon, an agreement or understanding that the other person will not be prosecuted.¹⁰⁵⁰ This crime is complete upon the making of the agreement and thus the subsequent violation of the criminal bargain is no defense.¹⁰⁵¹ Similarly, it is no defense that the other party has been tried and acquitted.¹⁰⁵²

Absent consideration, a mere promise not to report a defendant to the authorities is not a crime.¹⁰⁵³ “Consideration” may consist of money or anything of value or even some nonpecuniary advantage accruing to the person forbearing from prosecuting¹⁰⁵⁴ (e.g., a store owner agrees not to prosecute on the consideration of his goods being returned by a thief). The Iowa Supreme Court has held that it is immaterial that a theft victim merely received return of his rightful property, as long as such return was premised upon an agreement not to prosecute.¹⁰⁵⁵

Because the actus reus of this crime consists of receiving any consideration, it follows that a thief who approaches his theft victim about an “arrangement” can not be guilty of this offense. That is, “[o]nly the party who receives the consideration is criminally liable; the former criminal is not guilty of compounding by virtue of his act in giving the consideration.”¹⁰⁵⁶ Other offenses cover the latter’s wrongful conduct.¹⁰⁵⁷

a. Misprison of Felony Distinguished. Compounding a Felony is distinguished from the early-English common law crime of Misprison of Felony¹⁰⁵⁸ (which is not recognized as a crime in Iowa) by the former's requirement of an agreement. The gravamen of the latter crime is mere non-disclosure of a known felony committed by another person.¹⁰⁵⁹

b. Extortion Distinguished. Compounding a Felony bears striking resemblance to the more severe offense of Extortion.¹⁰⁶⁰ The latter can be committed by threatening to accuse another of a public offense, with the intent of obtaining anything of value for oneself or for another person. The focal point in Extortion is the threat, thus requiring an active role by the defendant. Contrastingly, one who compounds a Felony is nevertheless guilty merely by passively accepting unsolicited consideration by the original criminal. In such a circumstance, the receiving party could never be guilty of Extortion, absent the threat. On the other hand, when the party compounding the Felony was the party who initiated the "arrangement," then he can be guilty of Extortion if the requisite threat can be proved. Whether thinly-veiled threats will suffice for Extortion remains to be seen. In resolving this matter, it is important to keep in mind that the requisite threat for Extortion need not be tied to threats of violence (but rather only to a threat "to accuse another of a public offense"). Considerable discretion appears to be reposed in prosecutors in selecting the appropriate charge in the individual circumstances.¹⁰⁶¹

c. Grading. The only grade of this crime is an aggravated misdemeanor.¹⁰⁶² This single grade is better than the two-grade scheme under the pre-revised law (with the more serious grade relating to compounding a felony punishable by life imprisonment). The proper focus, used under the revised law, is upon the compounding-actor's conduct in being a party to an unlawful agreement and in wrongfully receiving a benefit thereunder irrespective of the no-prosecution benefit received by the other party.

C. Offenses Relating to Official Misconduct

1. Generally

Eight offenses, many of which include consolidation of several pre-revised statutes, comprise the offenses relating to Official Misconduct.¹⁰⁶³ Five offenses remain unchanged. Four of these relate to prohibited political activities involving public personnel or public property,¹⁰⁶⁴ and the other offense prohibits public personnel from having an interest in public contracts.¹⁰⁶⁵

2. Felonious Misconduct in Office

The revised offense of Felonious Misconduct in Office,¹⁰⁶⁶ the intent of which is "to protect the integrity of public records and documents,"¹⁰⁶⁷ consists of a consolidation of several prior statutes.¹⁰⁶⁸ The one new prohibition appears in section 721.1(2) of the Code, with the elements being: (1) a public officer or employee; (2) falsifying a public record or making what purports to be a public document; (3) with knowledge¹⁰⁶⁹ of its falsity.

The mens rea component of this general intent crime¹⁰⁷⁰ requires only proof of an intent to make a false entry—instead of a fraudulent intent—since, as Professor Yeager points out, "there is no legitimate reason for any person to knowingly falsify one of these instruments or documents."¹⁰⁷¹ Willful or intentional falsification is necessary, instead of mere mistakes and discrepancies arising from oversight, forgetfulness, or incompetence.¹⁰⁷² On the other hand, one's motive for the falsification is

These four offenses involve IOWA CODE §§ 721.3 (Solicitation for Political Purposes); 721.4 (Using Public Motor Vehicles for Political Purposes); 721.5 (Participation in Political Activities During Working Hours by State Employees); and 721.6 (Labeling Publicly Owned Motor Vehicles) (1979). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 464. There are no Uniform Jury Instructions for any of these crimes, all of which remain in the Criminal Code as unrepealed sections of the 1977 IOWA CODE. These are all general intent crimes. irrelevant.¹⁰⁷³

The statute apparently covers all public records or documents actually kept in an official capacity during the course of public employment, whether or not the particular records or documents in question were required by law to be kept.¹⁰⁷⁴ Caselaw interpreting the predecessor statute is supportive of this proposition,¹⁰⁷⁵ and the revised criminal provision¹⁰⁷⁶ still contains no limiting language (e.g., "when such is required . . . by law") such as that used in the related offense of Nonfelonious Misconduct in Office.¹⁰⁷⁷

The single grade of this offense is a class D felony.¹⁰⁷⁸ Again, the offense is not classified as a "forcible felony."¹⁰⁷⁹

3. Non-Felonious Conduct in Office

The related, multi-faceted offense of Non-Felonious Conduct in Office¹⁰⁸⁰ consists of a consolidation, with only minor changes, of several former statutes¹⁰⁸¹ concerning "fiscal mismanagement."¹⁰⁸² However, neither an injury to government nor an intent to profit is required.¹⁰⁸³ Moreover, because of the statutory requirement that these acts be done "knowingly,"¹⁰⁸⁴ this crime "deals only with intentional misconduct, and is not intended to reach negligent malfeasance or misfeasance."¹⁰⁸⁵ Nevertheless, the obvious purpose is to instill fiscal responsibility in the public sector.

The elements of one type of misconduct covered in this statute are: (1) a public officer, employee, or person acting under color of such office or employment; (2) who knowingly; (3) makes a contract; (4) which contemplates an expenditure known to be in excess of that authorized by law.¹⁰⁸⁶ Thus, this is a general intent crime. In the absence of definitive caselaw, this provision recently was the subject of a comprehensive attorney general's opinion¹⁰⁸⁷ regarding the criminal responsibility of county and city fiscal officers. Noting that Code section 721.2(1) "extends to every budgetary transaction involving the expenditure of tax dollars,"¹⁰⁸⁸ the opinion states that each expenditure of public money must, in the first instance, be authorized by law; i.e., "each expenditure requires an appropriation which, in turn, requires a formal act (e.g., a resolution) by the county or city governing body."¹⁰⁸⁹ Accordingly, the opinion continues, "the mere existence of an unencumbered balance of cash or investments does not constitute authorization by law for its expenditure. Before the county or city may use such moneys, the governing body must appropriate same through budget amendments."¹⁰⁹⁰

The knowledge requirement under the statute was interpreted in that opinion as being limited to "actual, positive knowledge of the facts," although it was conceded that the requisite mens rea "may also include knowledge resulting from deliberate ignorance of the facts."¹⁰⁹¹ The latter would include an employee who does not possess positive knowledge only because he consciously avoided it, for example, members of a city council who approve claims for expenditures while "deliberately ignoring" readily available information indicating the absence of necessary appropriations. The opinion noted: "Although we recognize the growing trend toward imputing actual knowledge from deliberate ignorance of the facts, we decline by this opinion to extend this view to section 721.2(1) and properly leave such conclusions to our judiciary."¹⁰⁹² The opinion concluded:

If the county or city fiscal officer knowingly issues a purchase order or other form of contract with actual knowledge that insufficient appropriations exist, section 721.2(1) is violated even though the fiscal officer did not negotiate the expenditure. Similarly, if the local governing body knowingly approves claims with actual knowledge of insufficient moneys, section 721.2(1) is violated even though the governing body did not negotiate the contract. Obviously, if an additional appropriation to meet the excess is made according to statutory procedures before approval of the claims, no liability is created. And if the fiscal officer or governing body acts in honest mistake of the facts (e.g., inaccurate accounting, overestimates, etc.), the requisite knowledge is absent and the offense is not committed.¹⁰⁹³

One apparent change is made in the part of the revised offense dealing with demanding or coercing employees to make contributions to any person, organization, or fund.¹⁰⁹⁴ The pre-revised statute was expressly limited to political contributions, whereas the revised statutory section omits the applicable limiting language.¹⁰⁹⁵ As Professor Yeager points out, this revised section "is directed at the practice of forcing public employees to contribute to political campaigns as a condition of employment,"¹⁰⁹⁶ nevertheless it appears that the total thrust of this revision will provide broader protection for public employees who otherwise could be pressured to contribute to charitable causes, such as the United Way Campaign, especially when there is an office "goal." The single grade of this offense is a serious misdemeanor.¹⁰⁹⁷

4. Misuse of Public Records and Files

A new general intent¹⁰⁹⁸ Misuse of Public Records and Files¹⁰⁹⁹ was added to the new Code as a general provision to prevent release, for personal profit, of certain public records or related accumulations of information by public officers and employees.¹¹⁰⁰ This provision, unfortunately, relates only to release for personal gain and does not even attempt to set a general privacy policy on "the availability of public records for general or limited inspection."¹¹⁰¹ The single grade of this offense is a serious misdemeanor.¹¹⁰²

D. Obstructing Justice Offenses

1. Generally

Eight offenses relating to various aspects of obstructing justice comprise chapter 719 of the Code. The most significant change in these offenses was made by a 1978 amendment making Out of State Flight to Avoid Prosecution¹¹⁰³ punishable conduct under the Escape section.¹¹⁰⁴ Some significant changes were made in six of the eight offenses, with only minor changes made in the dual offenses relating to furnishing intoxicants or controlled substances to inmates.¹¹⁰⁵

2. Interference with Official Acts

The crime of Interference with Official Acts¹¹⁰⁶ represents an expansion of the pre-revised crime of Resisting Execution of Process.¹¹⁰⁷ This revised crime consists of either knowingly resisting or obstructing a known peace officer in performance of his duty, or knowingly restricting or obstructing anyone in the execution either of process or of a court order. An added element requires knowledge¹¹⁰⁸ by the defendant that the person being obstructed or resisted¹¹⁰⁹ is a peace officer in performance of his duties, but knowledge of the scope of authority of the person restricted or obstructed is not required. Nor must the State prove that the defendant's intent was to obstruct the officer.

There are two grades of this offense, although it is not divided into degrees. The basic offense, without more, is merely a simple misdemeanor.¹¹¹⁰ Any one of the following aggravating circumstances changes this minor offense into an aggravated misdemeanor:¹¹¹¹ (1) purposeful infliction of "serious injury,"¹¹¹² (2) attempted infliction of "serious injury,"¹¹¹³ (3) displaying of a "dangerous weapon,"¹¹¹⁴ and (4) being armed with a "firearm,"¹¹¹⁵ each of which can constitute a separate crime.¹¹¹⁶

3. Refusing to Assist an Officer

In its revised form, the crime of Refusing to Assist an Officer¹¹¹⁷ includes three related pre-revised offenses,¹¹¹⁸ with several changes having been made. One change is that the assistance that can be summoned by an officer under the revised statute is limited to making an arrest or preventing any criminal act. A person refusing to assist in execution of process, upon being summoned by a police officer, is no longer subject to a criminal penalty. Another change is effected by the addition of a factor of reasonableness in order for an offender's conduct to be punishable. That is, an offender now must act both unreasonably and without lawful cause in refusing to assist an officer. No statutory standard is included as to what is an "unreasonable" refusal.¹¹¹⁹

No element of scienter is required on the face of this statute which defines a general intent crime.¹¹²⁰ That is, there is no express requirement that the defendant *know*¹¹²¹ that the person making the request or order for assistance is indeed a police officer or magistrate.¹¹²² This lack of knowledge, however, could arguably constitute a reasonable basis for the defendant refusing or neglecting to render the assistance. However, the legislative intent may very well have been to exclude a scienter component from this crime, as discerned by reading this provision in pari materia with the related provision on Interference With Official Acts¹¹²³ (a scienter type offense). Finally, there is only one grade of this offense, which is a simple misdemeanor.¹¹²⁴

4. Obstructing Prosecution or Defense

The pre-revised crime of Interference with Administration of Justice¹¹²⁵ was made more restrictive in its application in the new crime of Obstructing Prosecution or Defense,¹¹²⁶ as evidenced by making this crime a specific intent offense.¹¹²⁷ The revised offense basically involves tampering with physical evidence and with witnesses during the pre-trial or investigatory stage.¹¹²⁸ Such prohibited acts include: (1) knowingly tampering with admissible physical evidence; or (2) knowingly making available or furnishing false information with the intent that it be used in another's trial; or (3) knowingly inducing a material witness either to fail to appear when subpoenaed or to leave the state, or to conceal oneself.¹¹²⁹ Such acts must be done "with intent to prevent the apprehension or obstruct the prosecution or defense of any person."¹¹³⁰ There is only one grade of this offense. It is an aggravated misdemeanor.¹¹³¹

5. Escape

The revised crime of Escape¹¹³² differs, inter alia, from its predecessor¹¹³³ by not equally punishing the acts of escape and attempted escape.¹¹³⁴ This is accomplished by providing separate paragraphs for: (1) the consummated offense of an *intentional*¹¹³⁵ escape either from any "detention facility"¹¹³⁶ or from the custody of any public personnel to whom the defendant has been entrusted;¹¹³⁷ and (2) the essentially inchoate activity of being 1134. Id. § 745.18. There is no counterpart in the new Criminal Code, thus requiring an actual escape except for the alternative mode of being absent without leave.

1135. Proof of intent was not an essential element of Escape under the pre-revised code. See State v. Wharff, 257 Iowa 871, 134 N.W.2d 922 (1965). "The manner of effecting the escape is immaterial. It can be accomplished by stealth, guile, or violence." J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 426.

1136. This consolidates into one crime the two separate pre-revised crimes of prison break and breaking jail. See IOWA CODE §§ 745.1, .8 (1977) (repealed 1978).

1137. IOWA CODE § 719.4(2) (1979). Escape under either of these two alternative code sec-knowingly and voluntarily absent from any place where a prisoner is required to be.¹¹³⁸ This absent-without-leave provision would appear to encompass, attempted escapees who did not succeed in breaking out and thus did not escape from the detention facility, or did not succeed in breaking away from a custodial officer.

In State v. Davis,¹¹³⁹ the Iowa Supreme Court recently reversed an escape (by prison break)¹¹⁴⁰ conviction of a prison inmate, basing its reversal on the pre-revised escape law. In this case, the defendant inmate had failed to return to his jail cell at the designated time of day. The inmate had been given initial permission by prison authorities to leave his cell but had remained in the penitentiary library (drinking alcohol), and did not even attempt to leave the prison grounds. Since the gravamen of the pre-revised offense was unauthorized departure,¹¹⁴¹ the court reversed the conviction. In so doing, the court noted in dictum that the new revised crime of Escape (through its absent without leave provision) would impose criminal culpability upon an inmate who failed to make a timely return to his jail cell, even though he had initial permission to leave and had made no attempt to leave the institution itself.¹¹⁴² Distinguishing State v. Eads,¹¹⁴³ the court noted that the defendant Eads was convicted under the pre-revised crime of Breaking Jail¹¹⁴⁴ because of his failure to return to the county jail following work release. The crucial point was that the Eads decision turned on the issue that a county jail prisoner on work release remained "in the legal custody of the Sheriff."¹¹⁴⁵ No such comparable language was contained in the statute interpreted in Davis. The court in Davis noted therein that "[t]he new Iowa Criminal Code, not applicable here, plainly describes the offense the State would have us find in [the pre-revised] section 745.1."¹¹⁴⁶

The substantive scope of the revised offense was restricted by not retaining violation of parole¹¹⁴⁷ as conduct constituting Escape. Violation of parole, under the new Criminal Code, is not a separate criminal offense. Instead, the parolee will only be subject to serving out the remainder, or some indefinite part thereof, of his sentence.

tions is a class D felony if the defendant was convicted of or charged with any class of felony on the underlying offense, but only a serious misdemeanor when the underlying offense was any class of misdemeanor.

1138. IOWA CODE § 719.4(3) (1979). This activity is punishable uniformly as a serious misdemeanor, irrespective of whether the underlying conviction was for a felony or a misdemeanor.

1147. See IOWA CODE § 745.3 (1977) (repealed 1978).

A legislative amendment in 1978¹¹⁴⁸ restored the pre-revised requirement¹¹⁴⁹ that a sentence for Escape shall run consecutively with the original sentence, that is, to commence after the expiration of the term of the original sentence. The revised Criminal Code as passed in 1976 had omitted this requirement, and had thus left the matter to the judicial discretion of the sentencing judge.¹¹⁵⁰ Of course, inclusion of the mandatory term "shall" removes discretion from the sentencing court, leaving only consecutive sentences in Escape cases.

a. Flight to Avoid Prosecution. An addition was made by a 1978 amendment to the crime of Escape to include Flight to Avoid Prosecution.¹¹⁵¹ This is a separate crime which is new to Iowa law. The elements of this offense are: (1) fleeing from Iowa; (2) to avoid prosecution; (3) for a felony or an aggravated misdemeanor. This is patterned after the federal crime of Flight to Avoid Prosecution or Giving Testimony,¹¹⁵² which is considerably broader in its scope. The idea behind the new Iowa crime was to be able to invoke (for extradition purposes) the federal statute which is limited, by express terms, to interstate flight to avoid state prosecutions for a felony. This purpose is accomplished by making the state crime of Flight to Avoid Prosecution a class D felony. A collateral effect, however, is to impose additional penalties upon an offender who flees to avoid prosecution but nevertheless is apprehended, returned, and convicted of both the underlying offense and the "flight" offense. The apparent anomaly in this crime is that a person who flees Iowa to avoid prosecution on only an aggravated misdemeanor charge commits a class D felony by the collateral act of fleeing.

It appears clear that under the Iowa statute, unlike its federal counterpart, this crime is not triggered until formal commencement of prosecution.¹¹⁵³ This is because the word "prosecution" is used in section 719.4(4) of the Code without further definition. Thus, the general definitional clause in section 801.4(12) of the Code governs the definition of "prosecution", defined therein as "the commencement, including the filing of a complaint, and continuance of a criminal proceeding, and pursuit of that proceeding to final judgment"¹¹⁵⁴ Strictly interpreted, this means that a person who commits a felony or an aggravated misdemeanor will not violate this section if he flees before commencement of the prosecution against him.

This is a specific intent¹¹⁵⁵ crime, requiring proof that the defendant left the state with the intent "to avoid prosecution for a public offense"¹¹⁵⁶ Judicial interpretations of the federal statute have established that "the dominant purpose" of the interstate flight need not be to avoid prosecution,¹¹⁵⁷ but that mere absence from the originating state is not sufficient proof of an intent to flee to avoid prosecution.¹¹⁵⁸

b. Felony Murder Rule. One major change in the Code is that Escape has been made an underlying felony for purposes of the application of the felony murder rule to Murder in the First Degree.¹¹⁵⁹ Under the prior law, unpremeditated murders during an escape or attempted escape were punishable under the felony murder rule¹¹⁶⁰ only as second-degree murder.¹¹⁶¹

c. Grading. There are four grades, including two classifications of penalty schedules, of this offense, although they are not divided into degrees. It is a class D felony¹¹⁶² for either (1) a person convicted of (or charged with) any felony to intentionally escape from any detention facility, or (2) a person to flee from Iowa to avoid prosecution on a felony or an aggravated misdemeanor. Only a serious misdemeanor penalty¹¹⁶³ applies for either (1) a person convicted of (or charged with) any class of misdemeanor to intentionally escape from any detention facility, or (2) a prisoner to knowingly and voluntarily absent himself from any place he is required to be.

6. Assisting a Prisoner to Escape

This revised offense has apparently undergone some changes from the prior law. The revised offense¹¹⁶⁴ focuses upon the actor's conduct, consisting either of introducing or knowingly¹¹⁶⁵ causing to be introduced into the possession of any prisoner certain instruments or devices for facilitating escape. The crime is completed upon the mere rendering of assistance coupled with the intent¹¹⁶⁶ "to facilitate the escape of any prisoner,"¹¹⁶⁷ thus not requiring that any prisoner actually attempt to escape. In contrast, the language of the pre-revised statute¹¹⁶⁸ appears to have required at least an attempted escape. Moreover, unlike the pre-revised law,¹¹⁶⁹ the revised offense does not include an attempt.¹¹⁷⁰

The revised offense appears to be more restrictive in the type of assistance which is criminalized. This assistance is statutorily limited to introduction of "any weapon, explosive or incendiary substance, rope, ladder, or any [escape-facilitating] instrument or device"¹¹⁷¹ into any detention or correctional facility. This compares with the former statutory language of a person aiding or assisting "by any means whatever" a prisoner in any place of confinement in an attempt to escape therefrom.¹¹⁷² The import of this statutory change is that the revised crime is more restrictive in its scope of included conduct. That is, this section "applies only to the listed acts which will be done before the escape is attempted and which, by themselves, would not be more than mere preparation for the attempt, although any of them would be an overt act satisfying the requirements of the conspiracy section, section 706.1."¹¹⁷³ Other types of assistance to "escaping" prisoner would be left to be punishable under traditional aiding or abetting,¹¹⁷⁴ or conspiracy,¹¹⁷⁵ provisions.

It is interesting to note that the offense of Assisting a Prisoner to Escape can be punishable more severely than the underlying offense of Escape itself. Permitting a class A felon to escape from custody is a class C felony,¹¹⁷⁶ whereas an escaping class A felon is subject only to a class D felony penalty.¹¹⁷⁷ The same class D felony penalty schedule for Escape and for Assisting an Escape, however, are in effect for other felonies. Nevertheless, the unlawful act of assisting an escape by misdemeanants of any class is also punishable as a class D felony, while escapes by misdemeanants of any class are punishable merely as serious misdemeanors. Legislative clarification in this area would be of great assistance.

Escape¹¹⁷⁸ is that, unlike its predecessor statute,¹¹⁷⁹ the revised crime expressly applies not only to a jailor or other public personnel permitting, aiding, or abetting a prisoner to escape, but also to such conduct related to an attempted escape. The revised statute makes it clear, through the language of “voluntarily”¹¹⁸⁰ permits, aids, or abets,”¹¹⁸¹ that an intentional act (as opposed to negligence) is necessary to incur criminal culpability. The change in terminology from “suffering” escape to the revised language of “permits, aids or abets” should be of no consequence, however.¹¹⁸² The literal “reach” of this statute, especially as to permitting an escape, is recognized by Professor Yeager as follows:

When the person who permits the escape is also the person who has custody of the prisoner, and therefore has an affirmative duty to retain such custody, any failure to take the necessary steps to prevent an escape is permitting the escape. There seems to be no reason why the same cannot be said of any officer or employee who is aware of the escape attempt and who is in a position to prevent or impede it, but fails to do so.¹¹⁸³

The same questionable two-level grading scheme applies for this offense as for the related offense of Assisting a Prisoner to Escape.¹¹⁸⁴

VII. MISCELLANEOUS OFFENSES

A. Animal Offenses¹¹⁸⁵

1. Generally

Only minor changes were made in the three offenses which, taken together, provide limited protection to domestic animals from “some acts of wanton selfish cruelty.”¹¹⁸⁶ The aggravated misdemeanor¹¹⁸⁷ crime of Injury to Animals¹¹⁸⁸ is limited to maliciously causing aggravated injury to domestic animals belonging to another. Contrastingly, the related simple misdemeanor¹¹⁸⁹ offense of Cruelty to Animals¹¹⁹⁰ is broader in scope because it encompasses intentional or negligent mistreatment of domestic animals belonging either to another or to defendant himself. The final related crime, Exhibitions and Fights,¹¹⁹¹ is limited in its application to punish promoters for staging exhibitions where animals fight or are tormented. This section also applies to those persons furnishing a place for such exhibitions.¹¹⁹² Also, this section is the only one of the three offenses extending its protection to wild, non-domesticated creatures.¹¹⁹³ It is a serious misdemeanor.¹¹⁹⁴

There is no substantive change in these offenses, with the principal change being the inclusion of a single broad definition, "a nonhuman vertebrate,"¹¹⁹⁵ to define the term "animal." This single definition replaces the extensive listing of specific animals under the former statutes. Nevertheless, all "animals" are not included in the protections of these three related offenses. Section 717.1 covers malicious injury only to animals belonging to another. Section 717.2 is limited to cruelty to only certain types of animals (i.e., "any domestic animal, or fowl, or any dog or cat"). Section 717.3, while being the only provision to include all animals (including wild animals), has the most limited coverage (i.e., commercially using "animals," for exhibitions and fights).

2. Injury to Animals

The elements of this offense are: (1) maliciously; (2) killing, maiming, or disfiguring; (3) any "animal"; (4) of another; (5) having no right to do so. Alternatively, this offense can be committed either by maliciously administering poison to another's animal or by exposing another's animal to poison with the intent that it be taken. The latter of the three circumstances is the only one not requiring actual harm to the animal.

The fundamental purpose of this section is, as it always has been, to protect animal owners from financial or other loss. (Legislative solicitude for animals themselves is embodied in section 717.2, as discussed below). Thus, no protection whatsoever is given under section 717.1 to unowned animals or to animals owned by the perpetrator of the injury. Moreover, the terms "disfigure" and "malice" have been interpreted broadly to facilitate protection of animal owners, as discussed below.¹¹⁹⁶

The revised provision updates this section of the Code beyond Nineteenth Century notions. It recognizes that owners of unusual and exotic "non-human vertebrates" can suffer just as much from the killing, maiming and disfiguring of their animals as can dog-breeders and cattlefeeders. The original "Injuries to Beasts" provision was codified in 1851. It was drawn to protect farmers from livestock marauders, and it remained substantially unchanged until the 1979 revision. Practically, of course, livestock owners will remain the single most important group protected by section 717.1. Even so, the new section 717.1 extends protection to owners of animals of all sorts—from zoo and circus animals to pet canaries and pet sharks—the sole exclusion being non-vertebrates.

a. "Disfigure." There may be some confusion as to the meanings of "disfigure"¹¹⁹⁷ and "maliciously." According to Professor Yeager, "[t]he word 'disfigure,' taken in its context, means some permanent disfigurement, and not something temporary, as may result from clipping the animal's hair in a strange fashion, even though a temporary disfigurement may be annoying to the owner"¹¹⁹⁸ The legislative and interpretive history of the pre-revised law does not support this conclusion, however. The words "maliciously kill, maim or disfigure" were adopted wholesale from the previous enactment, which, in turn, took the phrase from past codifications beginning in 1851. The courts are likely, therefore, to attach especially heavy precedential value to past interpretations of these words. Caselaw supports the conclusion that "maims" means permanent injuries and "disfigure" means non-permanent injuries. Specifically, the Iowa Supreme Court has stated: "[t]o maim as applied to domestic animals, implies some permanent injury; but to disfigure is a lower grade of the same offense, and the disfiguring need not be of a permanent character to make the offense complete."¹¹⁹⁹ The example of "disfiguring" given in that case was shaving a horse's mane or tail.

"Disfiguring" as "non-permanent injury" is consistent with the conclusion that section 717.1 is designed to protect animal owners, not animals. A painless shaving gives a dog no grief, but it could cause great injury to an owner, particularly if the animal is kept for show purposes.

b. *Maliciously.*¹²⁰⁰ Early judicial interpretations of "maliciously" support both of these conclusions. For example, the Iowa Supreme Court has written that:

[m]alice toward the owner of the animal is the ingredient of this offense; and although the injury may be but very slight, yet if it is of such a character as to lessen the value of the animal to the owner, and shows the malicious intention of the person committing the act, we think, under the statute the offense is complete.¹²⁰¹

Similarly, it has said that "[m]ere wantonness, or an intent simply to injure the animal without malice against the person . . . is not sufficient But although the owner may be unknown, if the act is done maliciously, for the purpose and with the intent of injuring such person, it is sufficient."¹²⁰²

Malice must be directed toward the animal owner, and it will even be inferred if the act is wanton and the owner suffers injury.¹²⁰³ Since the value of the animal to the owner might be lessened by temporary disfigurement, as well as by permanent maiming, such permanence or lack thereof should be irrelevant. Furthermore, if "disfigure" and "maim" are to be equated, as Professor Yeager implies, there would have been no reason for the General Assembly to have used two distinct words.

Admittedly, the problem of when there is injury and when there is not remains. *State v. Harris*¹²⁰⁴ suggests a broad test, i.e., an animal owner might be injured emotionally, as well as financially. The problem will arise only rarely, that being when the animal is maimed or disfigured but the owner suffers no financial loss. Logic and convenience might prescribe a market value test, but justice counsels otherwise. An old man, fondly attached to a worthless old mongrel, is entitled to the same protection under the criminal law as the farmer who owns cattle of great value.

c. Relationship to Criminal Mischief. Another important issue raised by section 717.1 is its relation to section 716.1—criminal mischief. Criminal mischief is defined therein as "damage, defacing, alteration, or destruction of tangible property," and section 702.14 defines "property" as "anything of value, whether publicly or privately owned. The term includes both tangible and intangible property, labor and services. The term includes all that is included in the terms 'real property' and 'personal property.'"

Professor Yeager¹²⁰⁵ asserts that sections 716.1 and 717.1 are mutually exclusive, that section 716.1 encompasses inanimate property and section 717.1 animate. There seems to be little foundation for this assertion, as the statutory language is clear—section 716.1 says "tangible property." The distinction made is between tangible and intangible (and animals certainly are tangible), not between animate and inanimate. Had the General Assembly intended the latter distinction, it seems clear that they would have made it, since legislative awareness of such distinctions is evidenced by distinctions between animate and inanimate things being expressly made in the offense of Trespass.¹²⁰⁶ Further, chapters 714-716 of the 1979 Code include exhaustive provisions on malicious mischief to various types of property. In all likelihood, the General Assembly intended to consolidate all previously enumerated offenses into one—criminal mischief. It follows that all previously-enumerated property is now encompassed by the term “tangible property.” This conclusion is buttressed by an examination of the pre-revised offense of Malicious Injury.¹²⁰⁷ It forbade anyone to “willfully and maliciously destroy, injure, or secrete any goods, chattels or valuable papers of another” The term “chattels” was broadly interpreted in a similar forerunner statute as being used “in its broadest sense” and as such “undoubtedly cover[ing] every kind of personal property.”¹²⁰⁸ Finally, in the 1895 case State v. Phipps,¹²⁰⁹ the defendant’s conviction for malicious mischief to animals was upheld even though the Code specifically prohibited injuries to animals in another section, similar to the overlapping in the present Code.

All of this indicates that malicious injury to animals is probably subject to prosecution under both provisions, which has some important ramifications. First, anything prosecuted under section 717.1 will be punishable as an aggravated misdemeanor. Under chapter 716, the value of the animal’s treatment, in the case of injury, or replacement value, in the case of killing, will determine the degree of the offense. First and second degree criminal mischief are felonies.

Second, section 716.1 may encompass a broader range of animals than section 717.1, as the former includes “public property,” and the latter only animals “of another.” While municipal zoo animals may be covered by section 717.1, almost certainly they would be covered under section 716.1. It is even conceivable that wild animals could fall within the protection of section 716.1 if they are considered the ultimate property of the sovereign state.

Finally, section 716.1 does not require a showing of malice to the owner. The mischief need only be done “intentionally by one who has no right to so act.”

d. Without a Right To Do So. An essential element of section 716.1 is that the perpetrator injured another’s animal while “having no right to do so.” This should include all traditional defenses to criminal behavior (e.g., self defense, defense of others, and defense of property), as well as express statutory exceptions permitting destruction of animals in limited circumstances.¹²¹⁰ This same limitation applies to any prosecutions for Malicious Mischief.¹²¹¹

3. Cruelty to Animals

Section 717.2 protects a select group of animals from enumerated acts of human cruelty. It is clearly designed to protect animals and not animal-owners, but it is more narrowly drawn than previous provisions,¹²¹² which protected "any animal" and "any creature." Why this change was made is not entirely clear. It is particularly mysterious in light of the expanded coverage of section 717.1 and the new protection provided by section 717.3. Perhaps the legislators felt a blanket provision was too difficult to enforce. In any case, precisely what is included within "any domestic animal, or fowl" must await a judicial determination. Older cases, interpreting "domestic animal" for purposes of section 717.1 and its forerunners, have accepted hogs,¹²¹³ oxen,¹²¹⁴ and horses.¹²¹⁵

Section 717.2 leaves other questions unanswered. The first prohibited act—failing to supply sufficient food and water—clearly applies only to those who have confined or impounded an animal. So, apparently, there is no affirmative duty to give food and water to an animal over which one does not have custody.

The language of the provision (stated in the disjunctive, the repeated "who") indicates that the other prohibited acts apply without regard to who has confined the animal, or even if the animal is confined. Most of the enumerated transgressions are self-explanatory. Deprivation of necessary sustenance differs from failure to supply food and water only in that the former requires an active deprivation, not merely a failure to act, while the latter imposes an affirmative duty which may be violated by omission. Commenting on similar language, the Iowa Supreme Court has said in dicta:

[o]nly those owning or having the care or control [of animals] . . . are required to provide [them] 'with proper food, drink, shelter or protection from weather,' and it was not intended to impose on others who may learn of an animal's lack of proper care the duty to supply these at the peril of being punished by the criminal laws of the state.¹²¹⁶

It is not clear whether "sustenance" includes shelter. The previous Code used the words "unnecessarily fail to provide the same with proper food, drink, shelter, or protection from the weather. . . ."¹²¹⁷ The express alteration, coupled with the commonly understood meaning of "sustenance," may indicate an intent to exclude shelter.

It is also not clear whether the phrase "unjustified pain, distress or suffering" applies only to "kill any such animal" or also to the other enumerated acts of cruelty. Nor is it clear when "pain, distress or suffering" is "unjustified." The best and most logical explanation is that "torture, torment, deprive of necessary sustenance, mutilate, overdrive, overload, drive where overloaded, beat, or kill" is meant to be an exhaustive list of acts of cruelty, which acts are defined as causing "unjustified pain, distress, or suffering." What is justified and what is not will depend largely on judicial sympathy for individual members of the animal kingdom.

4. Exhibitions and Fights

Section 717.3 is new, and like section 717.2, it refers to "any animal." However, it does not limit protection to animals "of another." Thus, wild animals are given only this limited protection in chapter 717.

Although section 717.3 only applies to promoters and to persons who keep places where prohibited exhibitions and fights are held, section 725.11 prohibits related conduct. That provision makes it a serious misdemeanor to have any connection with money paid as admission to any animal fights or baiting spectacles. The scope of section 725.11 may be broad enough to cover everyone remotely connected with such an affair, possibly including even the spectators.¹²¹⁸

B. Bribery and Corruption Offenses¹²¹⁹

1. Generally

Five bribery offenses,¹²²⁰ three voting offenses,¹²²¹ and the crime of Misconduct by Election Official¹²²² comprise the bribery and corruption offenses in chapter 722 of the Iowa Code. Seven of these offenses remain unchanged from their pre-revised form. Only two bribery offenses relating to public employment or public service have been changed, but not until the 1980 legislative session.

1218. See note 1192 supra.

1219. There are no Uniform Jury Instructions for any of these offenses. See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, §§ 481-90.

1220. These offenses, all of which essentially are specific intent crimes, are IOWA CODE §§ 722.1 (Bribery); 722.2 (Accepting a Bribe); 722.3 (Bribery in Sports); 722.4 (Bribery of an Elector); 722.6 (Bribery of Election Officials) (1979). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, §§ 482-86.

1221. These offenses, none of which includes a particularized state of mind, are IOWA CODE §§ 722.5 (Improper Voting); 722.8 (Duress to Prevent Voting); 722.9 (Duress to Procure Voting) (1979). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, §§ 487, 489-90.

1222. IOWA CODE § 722.7 (1979). See generally J. YEAGER & R. CARLSON, supra note 12, § 488. This is a particularized state of mind crime, with the prosecution required to prove that defendant "knowingly" did any of the prohibited acts. For a detailed discussion of knowledge as a requisite mental state of criminal activity, see text accompanying notes 572-93 in Part I of this Article, 29 DRAKE L. REV. 239 (1980).

2. Bribery and Accepting Bribes

The general crime of Bribery¹²²³ in the new Iowa Criminal Code consists of a consolidation of several pre-revised Code sections into one, with a uniform penalty applying to "all attempts to bribe persons who are serving in a public capacity."¹²²⁴ The statutory uniformity was mandated in 1975 by the Iowa Supreme Court in State v. Books.¹²²⁵ Like prior law,¹²²⁶ Bribery also encompasses the attempt to bribe, and makes the attempt equally punishable with the consummated offense. Conversely, the related offense of Accepting a Bribe¹²²⁷ focuses upon the public official or employee who solicits or receives a bribe.

With the substantive nature of these two offenses unchanged in the new Iowa Criminal Code as it went into effect in 1978, and as it was amended in 1980, Iowa continues to have "very likely the strictest bribery statutes in existence."¹²²⁸ This is because of the broad statutory language prohibiting the offering or giving of "anything of value or any benefit"¹²²⁹ to public officers or employees with the understanding that their official actions would be influenced thereby, and conversely the soliciting or accepting of same by public officers or employees.¹²³⁰

The General Assembly rejected a bill in 1980¹²³¹ which would amend these two bribery statutes to permit the giving, receiving, and even soliciting of gifts up to fifty dollar value "in any one occurrence"¹²³² to any person serving in a public capacity even when done so with the intent to influence that person's official actions. An amendment that passed¹²³³ maintained the prohibition against any gratuity but added the requirement that any gift, in order to be illegal under these bribery statutes, must have been "given pursuant to an agreement, arrangement, or understanding that the gift would influence the person serving in a public capacity."¹²³⁴

The elements of the revised crime of Bribery¹²³⁵ are: (1) offering, promising, or giving; (2) anything of value or any benefit; (3) to any person engaged in a public capacity; (4) pursuant to an agreement or arrangement or understanding; (5) that the thing of value or benefit will influence the person's exercise of his public duties. Similarly, those of the related revised crime of Accepting a Bribe¹²³⁶ are: (1) a person engaged in a public capacity; (2) knowingly; (3) accepting or receiving or soliciting; (4) any promise or anything of value on any benefit; (5) pursuant to an understanding or arrangement; (6) that the promise, thing of value, or benefit will influence his exercise of public duties.

a. Any Gratuity. The phrase "anything of value or any benefit" was construed in a 1977 attorney general opinion¹²³⁷ to preclude public officials from being offered or accepting any gratuity, "no matter how slight or insignificant,"¹²³⁸ including a single cup of coffee or a free ride in an automobile. Of course, such a gratuity must have been received with knowledge that it was given with the intent to influence his official actions, although not necessarily in a particular transaction. After the 1980 amendment, it is necessary to show an agreement, arrangement, or understanding that the gift is for the purpose of influencing such official actions.

This restrictive reading of a gratuity was reaffirmed, or at least not rejected, in a letter released by the Iowa Attorney General in 1979.¹²³⁹ Nevertheless, an exception for general business or advertising gifts was essentially created in a subsequent official attorney general's opinion.¹²⁴⁰ That opinion suggested that businesses could give away small items "with their names and logos prominently displayed for advertising purposes" such as "pencils, letter openers, calendars, and the like" to "past customers, friends, other businesses as well as to government officials, employees, and agencies," without running afoul of the bribery statutes.¹²⁴¹ This was because of practical difficulties of proof as to the requirement of intent to influence official actions in these limited circumstances: "the value of the gift is very small, is given to a large group of people and not exclusively to public officials, and has obvious advertising benefits."¹²⁴²

b. Intent. The intent of the donor to influence the donee's official actions is the gravamen of these two bribery offenses. As a result, the prosecution need not prove that the donee's official actions were, in fact, influenced. However, the donee apparently must know that the donor's purpose in giving the gift was to influence the donee's official actions. This is because the Accepting a Bribe statute refers to the public official or employee "knowingly [accepting] or [receiving] any promise or anything of value or any benefit given pursuant to an understanding or arrangement that the promise or thing of value or benefit will influence"¹²⁴³

The placement of the adverb "knowingly"¹²⁴⁴ limits its scope to the acts of accepting or receiving. This means that one must have been personally aware that he had received a gift.

3. Gift Law Limitations

The overlapping of these bribery offenses in chapter 722 with the unrepealed pre-revised gift-limitation¹²⁴⁵ law in section 68B.5 of the Iowa Code has continued. In the 1980 amendments, section 68B.5 had not been considered to be preempted by these bribery offenses under the pre-revised law.¹²⁴⁶

The amended gift law permits gifts¹²⁴⁷ up to fifty dollars in value "in any one occurrence" to any person serving in a public capacity. An unlimited number of gifts can be offered, given, received, and even solicited, however, so long as the fifty dollars per occurrence limitation is not exceeded.

The fifty dollars limitation applies to gifts involved "in any one occurrence." This means that the value of all gifts involved in the same "occurrence" must be totalled, and not that each gift can equal up to fifty dollars when there are multiple gifts.¹²⁴⁸

What constitutes an "occurrence" is not set out in the statute. In its broadest sense, this could mean each separate contact which conceivably could occur daily if not hourly. Thus, a legislative lobbyist who has ten different meetings with a legislator on the same day to discuss the same legislative matter conceivably could legally "shower" that individual legislator with up to five hundred dollars worth of gifts during that one day.

A more restrictive interpretation of the term "occurrence" is desirable to prevent emasculation of the apparent legislative intent to legitimize the giving and receiving of small gifts. Indeed, probably the most commonly expressed concern by legislators had been their having to pay for their own meals and drinks even at meetings where they had spoken pro bono. It is submitted that an "occurrence" should be read in light of a function or a project, instead of every single face-to-face contact. Under this interpretation, a lobbyist could only confer one fifty dollar bevy of gifts upon an individual legislator while lobbying on the same legislative matter. Accordingly, there could be one fifty dollar gift all at once or numerous small gifts which do not exceed a cumulative total of fifty dollars. This approach would permit the fifty dollar limit for each occasion that a legislator spoke before the same organization, provided, of course, that each speech was bona-fide.

An attorney general's opinion,¹²⁴⁹ issued June 25, 1980, concluded that "a determination of whether two or more gifts constitute 'one occurrence' is to be made by reference to the totality of the circumstances surrounding the gifts in question."¹²⁵⁰ Setting out some factors intended to be suggestive of the nature of the inquiry thought appropriate in individual cases to be decided on their own merits, the opinion states:

If the gifts involved are related to one another, they are likely part of the same occurrence. In making a determination as to the relatedness of more than one gift, it is our opinion that one would look to such factors as the nature and similarity of the gifts, the setting in which the gifts are given, the nature of the relationship between the donor and the donee, and the time lapse between the gifts in question. If the gifts in question are of a similar nature or are related to one another, if the gifts were made in the same or a similar setting, if the relationship between the donor and the donee rather than in the personal relations between the parties, and if there was a relatively brief period of time separating the gifts in question it is our opinion that such gifts would likely be found to constitute one occurrence.¹²⁵¹

Section 68B.5, until the 1980 amendments, had applied only to state officers and state employees, but now, like the bribery offenses, it applies to public officials at all levels of government. Section 68B.5 continues to overlap with sections 722.1 and 722.2 in prohibiting essentially the same conduct, with two major exceptions. The exceptions being a value in excess of fifty dollars,¹²⁵² only if given "in any one occurrence," and that section 68B.5 does not require an intent to influence the donee's official actions.¹²⁵³ Accordingly, the prohibited gifts crime should be a lesser included offense of the crime of Accepting a Bribe.

a. Grading. There is a single grade for each of these complementary bribery offenses in chapter 722. Bribery is a class D felony, whereas Accepting a Bribe is a class C felony. Of course, neither offense is a "forcible felony."¹²⁵⁴ On the other hand, the less culpable section 68B.5 crime, Excessive Gifts to Public Employees, is more realistically only a serious misdemeanor.¹²⁵⁵ This same penalty schedule applies to the new offense¹²⁵⁶ for failure to report receipt of gifts valued in excess of fifteen dollars in any occurrence by public officials and employees.

C. Civil Rights Offenses¹²⁵⁷

No changes were made in the new Criminal Code regarding the two crimes¹²⁵⁸ included in the unrepealed pre-revised code chapter on Infringement of Civil Rights.¹²⁵⁹ Unfortunately, section 729.4 of the Code, relating to unfair employment practices, should not have been retained. This section conflicts with the modern non-penal approach to violations of civil rights as exemplified in the Iowa Civil Rights Act.¹²⁶⁰ Moreover, section 729.4 does not include sex or physical handicaps in its coverage, unlike the civil rights act.¹²⁶¹ Each of these crimes has its own specific penalty provisions incorporated therein, in contrast to the general scheme of placing the individual crimes into a small range of classification of offenses.¹²⁶²

D. Offenses Against the Family

Six offenses criminally defining "acts which attack the stability and welfare of the family"¹²⁶³ comprise Code chapter 726 on "Protection of the Family." Only the offense of Wanton Neglect of a Resident of a Health Care Facility¹²⁶⁴ is entirely new. However, all five of the carryover pre-revised offenses were changed somewhat. One of these "family protection" offenses—Incest¹²⁶⁵—is treated in this Article in another grouping of offenses relating to Sexual Abuse and sexual morality.¹²⁶⁶

1. Bigamy

The major change made in the crime of Bigamy¹²⁶⁷ was the elimination of "subsequent bigamous cohabitation"¹²⁶⁸ as an alternative mode of committing the offense, thus criminalizing only those bigamous marriages made in Iowa. So restricted, this revised offense can only be committed by either (1) marrying another person, while already having a living spouse, or (2) marrying a person, knowing that person already has a living spouse. As defined, this revised offense applies equally to both parties in a bigamous marriage, as compared to the separate, less serious pre-revised offense of Knowingly Marrying Spouse of Another¹²⁶⁹ in addition to Bigamy¹²⁷⁰ itself.

The statute is unclear on its face as to the mental state required when the actus reus consists of marrying another while already having a spouse. The fact that the defendant knew he was married at the time is not a statutory requisite. Contrastingly, knowledge¹²⁷¹ is expressly provided for when the actus reus consists of marrying another whom the defendant knows has another living spouse. Reading these two provisions (which are in the same section), in pari materia, the legislative intent to exclude knowledge as an element in the former situation seems clear.¹²⁷² The knowledge element is not mentioned in the Uniform Jury Instructions which set out the elements of Bigamy based upon the defendant having a living spouse.¹²⁷³

A person should know whether he is married or not,¹²⁷⁴ and a new defense based upon a mistaken but reasonable belief that his prior marriage was dissolved has been added to the new Criminal Code, as discussed below.¹²⁷⁵ There is no sound policy reason for extending the mens rea requirement beyond that,¹²⁷⁶ and thus encumber the prosecution with having to refute spurious claims, such as amnesia.

Three defenses to a bigamy prosecution are provided for in the new Criminal Code. Two of these, a three-year absence of the spouse¹²⁷⁷ and a reasonable belief of the spouse's death,¹²⁷⁸ were retained unchanged from the prior law. However, a third defense relating to a prior divorce¹²⁷⁹ has

This [then proposed] provision contrasts sharply with [the then current] section 703.2 of the Code which enumerates only the defense of a lawful prior divorce, and has been construed to disallow a defense of mistake of fact or mistake of law as to the belief in the validity of a prior divorce. . . . It is apparent from the drafter's records been expanded considerably, by recognizing a defendant's mistaken but reasonable belief that there was a valid dissolution of the prior marriage. A "reasonable belief," by terms of the statute, must be based upon "reasonably convincing evidence" of a valid termination of the prior marriage. A reasonable belief is defined in the Uniform Jury Instructions as "that which a reasonable person would believe, based upon the facts and circumstances known to such person at that time,"¹²⁸⁰ without requiring seeking out proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the truth. Finally, this offense is a serious misdemeanor.¹²⁸¹

2. Abandonment of a Dependent Person

Several aspects of the pre-revised crime of Exposing and Abandoning a Child¹²⁸² have been changed in the expanded crime of Abandonment of a Dependent Person.¹²⁸³ One major change involves a significant broadening of the scope of protected persons. The new crime is defined in terms of a "dependent person"¹²⁸⁴ instead of the limitation to children under the pre-revised law. Thus, the offense of abandonment applies to mentally or physically infirm persons irrespective of their age.¹²⁸⁵ The operative fact is that the defendant have legal custody of the dependent person.¹²⁸⁶ Moreover, the applicable maximum age of a child has been raised from six to fourteen years.¹²⁸⁷

This revised crime can be committed, in the alternative, either: (1) by that they added the defense of reasonable belief based on reasonably convincing evidence to protect a person who had made a good faith effort to find out whether a prior divorce was valid.

1286. The term "custody" is not defined in the Code. A good working definition has been suggested by Professor Yeager as "the legal duty of caring for and keeping the abandoned one." As he explains, "[t]his can be a temporary duty, informally assumed, such as that of a nurse or babysitter, as well as a more permanent duty, formally imposed, as by the appointment of a guardian." knowingly¹²⁸⁸ or recklessly¹²⁸⁹ exposing a dependent person to a hazard or danger against which such person could not reasonably be expected to protect himself; or (2) by abandoning a dependent person, knowing or having reason to believe such person will be exposed to such a hazard or danger.¹²⁹⁰ Contrastingly, the sole actus reus under the pre-revised statute consisted of exposing a child with the intent solely to abandon it. Thus, this revised crime no longer is a specific intent¹²⁹¹ crime, under either of the alternative modes of commission. The act of exposure to a known danger, which appears to be an expansion of the prior law, can be done either knowingly or recklessly; thus "mere neglect of duty" is excluded as a predicate for this offense.¹²⁹² The related less severe offense of Wanton Neglect of a Minor¹²⁹³ can occur through acts of abandonment or through mere neglect of duty.¹²⁹⁴ The alternative actus reus of abandonment apparently requires an element of permanency in light of the interpretation in State v. Wilson,¹²⁹⁵ given the word "abandon" in the related offense of Wanton Neglect of a Minor, as discussed in detail below.¹²⁹⁶ This is a class C felony,¹²⁹⁷ but is not a "forcible felony."¹²⁹⁸

3. Nonsupport

The pre-revised offense of Desertion¹²⁹⁹ has been renamed Nonsupport,¹³⁰⁰ with several modifications. The new elements are: (1) failure or refusal to provide support for a child¹³⁰¹ or ward under the age of eighteen; (2)

by a parent or guardian; (3) able to provide support.¹³⁰² This is a general intent crime.¹³⁰³

Two changes have been made in the definition of the victim of this offense. The major change is the omission of a wife altogether. The other change lengthens the support requirements of parents or guardians by raising the age of the child or ward to be supported from sixteen to eighteen years.

The revised offense did not retain the requirement of *wilfull*¹³⁰⁴ failure or refusal to provide support. Nevertheless, there may be no operative effect of this omission, in light of the new parental requirement regarding ability to provide support but failing or refusing to do so.

The new Criminal Code changes the concept of the level of support significantly, with the omission of the pre-revised requirement that the child be left destitute. Support, under the new definition, means either "the minimal requirements of food, clothing, or shelter"¹³⁰⁵ in general, or any specific support level fixed by court order in particular, such as part of a dissolution of marriage decree. No statutory definition of "minimal" support is given. The standard used in the Uniform Jury Instructions is that the jury should determine what is "minimal" support "from the facts and circumstances of the present situation of the defendant's [unsupported child or ward]."¹³⁰⁶ This standard is not overly informative; it appears worthless as a legal guideline. Reference to "the basic necessities of life" would be preferable.¹³⁰⁷

A new special defense was added to statutorily exempt a parent or guardian from criminal responsibility for nonsupport of their runaway children who left home without consent of their parents or guardians.¹³⁰⁸ Thus, the "true nature" of the parent's duty is merely to offer the requisite support.¹³⁰⁹ Also, this is a class D felony,¹³¹⁰ but is not a "forcible felony."¹³¹¹

4. Wanton Neglect of a Minor

The revised crime of Wanton Neglect of a Minor¹³¹² is much more specific than the pre-revised statute¹³¹³ as to what activities are encompassed. Specifically, a parent or other person having custody of a minor (i.e., someone under eighteen) commits this crime either: (1) by knowingly¹³¹⁴ acting in a manner likely to be injurious to the minor's physical, mental, or moral welfare; or (2) by abandoning such minor to fend for himself, knowing¹³¹⁵ he is unable to do so.¹³¹⁶ A specific defense is provided under the first alternative recognizing faith healing, but only to the extent that the particular religious method of healing is permitted under Iowa law. Under the second alternative, the actus reus of abandoning the minor, together with the requisite scienter, are sufficient to incur criminal culpability, without the necessity of any attendant circumstances (such as exposure of the minor to a hazard or danger as required for the more severe crime of Abandonment of a Dependent Person).¹³¹⁷

A charge of abandonment under subsection two of section 726.6 has been held to require an element of permanency, however. That is, leaving a minor unattended through a temporary absence will not support a conviction. Reversing a conviction in State v. Wilson,¹³¹⁸ the Iowa Supreme Court noted that the term "abandons" in similar criminal statutes in other jurisdictions "has generally been construed to mean an intention to leave the child permanently, as distinguished from temporary neglect."¹³¹⁹ The evidentiary basis of this standard was insufficient to uphold the conviction of a single mother who left her eighteen-month-old child unattended in a basement apartment for approximately ninety minutes while she went nearby to use a public telephone for social purposes.¹³²⁰

The term "abandons" is not defined in the Criminal Code, either in section 726.6 or in the general definitions section. Because there are no Uniform Jury Instructions for this crime, there is no guidance from the bar committee either. A jury instruction on abandonment apparently can follow the statutory definition of abandonment in section 232.2(1) of the new Juvenile Code which was passed two years later in 1978, especially in light of the court's reference to section 232.2(1) with apparent approval, read together with the court's previous interpretation of "abandons."¹³²¹ The definition set out in section 232.2(1) reads:

"Abandonment of a child" means the permanent relinquishment or surrender, without reference to any particular person, of the parental rights, duties, or privileges inherent in the parent-child relationship. Proof of abandonment must include both the intention to abandon and the acts by which the intention is evidenced. The term does not require that the relinquishment or surrender be over any particular period of time.

It certainly seems reasonable to use the same definition of "abandonment" for both the related Criminal and Juvenile Codes. Moreover, the section 232.2(1) definition is followed in the Code chapter on termination of parental rights.¹³²²

Although the court intimated no opinion in State v. Wilson, it's apparent that the defendant could have been convicted under the previous statute.¹³²³ The gravamen of the previous offense was wanton neglect, without mention of the more restrictive abandonment. "Neglect" was statutorily defined as "willful neglect of such a nature, arising under such circumstances as a parent of ordinary intelligence actuated by normal and natural concern for the welfare of the child would not permit or be a party to."¹³²⁴

This crime, instead of the more serious crime of Abandonment of a Dependent Person, apparently would be committed when a young child is "abandoned under circumstances which make it unlikely that he will come to any harm before he is picked up"¹³²⁵ As to the nebulous standard of leaving a minor to fend for himself, Professor Yeager feels that this probably means "more than mere survival, and will be held to mean survival under conditions which will not be injurious to the child's physical, mental, or moral welfare."¹³²⁶ The single grade of this offense is a serious misdemeanor.¹³²⁷

tion against wanton neglect to residents of health care facilities.¹³²⁸ The elements of this crime are: (1) knowingly;¹³²⁹ (2) acting in a manner likely to be injurious to the physical, mental, or moral welfare; (3) of a resident of a health care facility.¹³³⁰ The subjects of this crime should only be personnel of a health care facility,¹³³¹ with legal obligations towards their residents being imposed similar to the parent-child obligation under section 726.6 of the Code. E. Health, Safety, and Welfare Offenses¹³³³

Ten offenses relating to health, safety or welfare are collected in section 727 of the Code, with no substantial changes being made in four of these.¹³³⁴ All ten offenses were included in scattered portions of the pre-revised code. None of these offenses represents conduct that is central to the criminal justice system. In light of this, whether they should be included in the new Criminal Code at all is questionable,¹³³⁵ especially since several other regulatory type offenses were not included.¹³³⁶

Expansion of the conduct constituting the crime has occurred in five of these offenses. The simple misdemeanor offense¹³³⁷ of Exposure to Radia-

An eleventh related offense, Maintaining Pay Toilets in Public Rooms, also a simple misdemeanor, has been transferred outside the Criminal Code to § 135.21, after originally appearing as § 727.11. Regulation of fireworks, x-rays and abandoned refrigerators, if needed at all, surely belongs outside the criminal code.

tion,¹³³⁸ previously limited¹³³⁹ to "the use of x-rays in the retail shoe trade,"¹³⁴⁰ was broadened to criminalize "the intentional exposure of persons to x-rays for any purpose other than medical diagnosis and treatment."¹³⁴¹ The serious misdemeanor¹³⁴² offense of Wiretaps and Eavesdropping,¹³⁴³ formerly limited to wire taps on telephone and telegraph lines,¹³⁴⁴ was broadened to prohibit "any electronic or mechanical interception of conversations or communications."¹³⁴⁵ The simple misdemeanor¹³⁴⁶ offense of Distributing Dangerous Substances¹³⁴⁷ was expanded from mere inclusion of pharmaceuticals to general terminology, specifically "corrosive, caustic, poisonous or other injurious substance,"¹³⁴⁸ which should provide "the maximum desirable coverage."¹³⁴⁹ The revised simple misdemeanor¹³⁵⁰ offense of Obstructing Emergency Phone Calls¹³⁵¹ now applies to persons using any telephone or telegraph line, after previously being limited to failure to relinquish party lines or public pay telephones.¹³⁵²

Contrastingly, two of these revised offenses are more limited in scope. The serious misdemeanor¹³⁵³ offense of Exhibiting Deformed or Abnormal Persons¹³⁵⁴ was changed from an absolute prohibition¹³⁵⁵ to a qualified prohibition resting upon the consent of the exhibited person. As Professor Yeager explains, the purpose of this law is to protect such persons from exploitation while not "depriving these unfortunates of what may be their only opportunity to earn a living.”¹³⁵⁶ It certainly is difficult to argue with such logic, especially since only consenting, paying customers will see the exhibits.

The other “criminalization” cutback occurred with the Fireworks offense,¹³⁵⁷ a serious misdemeanor.¹³⁵⁸ The revised crime is limited to sale, offering for sale, exposing for sale, or using fireworks.¹³⁵⁹ This crime no longer prohibits possession, or criminalizes a non-sale transfer of fireworks.¹³⁶⁰ The wisdom of such changes can be questioned, since the overall effectiveness of regulation of fireworks can be reduced.

F. Labor Related Offenses¹³⁶¹

Several labor related offenses are included in each of three chapters of the Code dealing with blacklisting employees,¹³⁶² labor union membership,¹³⁶³ and labor boycotts and strikes.¹³⁶⁴ These unrepealed pre-revised chapters dealing with rather obscure and petty crimes were unfortunately left in the new Criminal Code. Each of these crimes has its own specific penalty provisions incorporated therein, in contrast to the general scheme of placing the individual crimes into a small range of classification of offenses.¹³⁶⁵

G. Public Disorder Offenses

1. Generally

Four misdemeanor crimes constitute the offenses relating to public disorder, appearing in chapter 723 of the new Criminal Code. Two of these, Riot and Unlawful Assembly, require multiple offenders (three or more) in order for the disruptive activity to be criminal. These offenses relate to disruption of the public peace and quiet, as opposed to attempted disruption of governmental bodies.¹³⁶⁶

2. Riot

The most serious of these offenses is Riot,¹³⁶⁷ an aggravated misdemeanor.¹³⁶⁸

a. Actus Reus. An individual's actus reus in this crime consists of willingly joining in or remaining a part of a riot, knowing or having reasonable grounds to believe that a riot is occurring. A riot (i.e., the corpus delicti of the offense) is statutorily defined as an assembly of three or more persons in a violent manner to the disturbance of others, with one or more of these persons using unlawful force or violence against another person or causing property damage.¹³⁶⁹

b. Intent. Of course, "mere presence at the scene of a riot is not punishable."¹³⁷⁰ This is because a person must willingly and knowingly¹³⁷¹ have joined in or remained a part of a riot. The requisite showing of intent requires evidence that defendant "conduct[ed] himself in a violent manner."¹³⁷² So interpreted, this statute does not extend to punishment of innocent bystanders and accordingly is not unconstitutionally overbroad.¹³⁷³

c. Remaining a Part Of. The initial purpose for an assembly is irrelevant. If a lawful assembly becomes riotous and an individual intentionally remains a part of the riot, then he is liable to criminal sanction. Of course, a defendant must know¹³⁷⁴ or have reasonable grounds to believe that a riot is occurring.¹³⁷⁵ Moreover, he must conduct himself in a violent manner, thus preventing an innocent bystander from being criminally punished, as noted above.¹³⁷⁶

d. Multiple Offender Requirement and Joint Liability. While retaining the numerical requirement of three or more offenders, the crime of Riot, as redefined,¹³⁷⁷ makes it clear that now only one of these "rioters" needs to 1368. An aggravated misdemeanor is punishable by either a determinate term of confinement not to exceed two years or a maximum fine of $5000 or both. “actually use unlawful force or violence”¹³⁷⁸ in order for all of them to be convicted. Once the prosecution has proved a riot, any one of the participants can be convicted even though the offender did not actually participate in the personal injury or property damage. All that need be proven is “community of purpose”¹³⁷⁹ with proof that a particular defendant was a participant in the riot itself.¹³⁸⁰ So restricted, this provision has been held to be not unconstitutionally overbroad.¹³⁸¹

e. Public Place. That “riotous activity is punishable only if it occurs in public” was determined in Williams v. Osmundson,¹³⁸² notwithstanding the lack of any such restriction in section 723.1 itself. This interpretation is in line with the purpose of preserving public order, rather than of regulating “private relationships.”¹³⁸³

f. Constitutionality. The constitutionality of section 723.1 has been upheld¹³⁸⁴ on the following grounds: (1) the statute is not overbroad by applying to lawful assemblies that become unruly, because it requires a specific intent to engage in action that is known to be a riot; (2) the statute does not create an unlawful presumption because “mere presence” at the scene of a riot is not punished; (3) the statute is not void for vagueness since it furnishes reasonable notice as to its proscribed activity (violent group activity occurring in public).

3. Unlawful Assembly

The only significant change made in the simple misdemeanor¹³⁸⁵ crime of Unlawful Assembly¹³⁸⁶ was to broaden the scope of the offense to include persons who remain part of an unlawful assembly although knowing, or reasonably believing, that an unlawful assembly exists.¹³⁸⁷ An individual’s actus reus in this crime consists of knowingly and willingly joining in or remaining a part of an unlawful assembly. An “unlawful assembly” is an assembly of three or more persons assembled together in a violent manner and with intent to commit a public offense.¹³⁸⁸

Generally a prelude to a Riot, this essentially inchoate offense can be charged when the requisite personal violence or property damage for a Riot has not occurred or when the criminal intent is to commit a public offense not involving personal violence or property damage.¹³⁸⁹ However, a rowdy gathering of three or more persons is not ipso facto an unlawful assembly. "It becomes one [an unlawful assembly] when there is a community of purpose to commit a public offense."¹³⁹⁰

4. Failure to Disperse

Several changes were made to the pre-revised crimes now consolidated in the new crime of Failure to Disperse,¹³⁹¹ a simple misdemeanor.¹³⁹² One change is that the scope of the new crime has been broadened to cover persons in the immediate vicinity of a riot or unlawful assembly, rather than being restricted to active participants therein. Another change is the drastic reduction in the number of necessary participants in the underlying activity. That is, although the criminal responsibility for Failure to Disperse is an individual matter, nevertheless there must still be at least three persons involved in the underlying criminal activity (e.g., Riot or Unlawful Assembly) before triggering the right of a peace officer to give an order to disperse (of a nature being criminally punishable for violation thereof). The final change limits the classification of public officials authorized to order dispersals, for purposes of this crime, to peace officers. Formerly, such orders could be made by judges, magistrates, and certain other public officials.

Specifically, the elements of the revised crime of Failure to Disperse are: (1) refusal to obey a peace officer's order to disperse; (2) by either a participant in a Riot or an Unlawful Assembly or by any person in the vicinity of a Riot or an Unlawful Assembly; (3) who is within hearing distance of such order.¹³⁹³ Thus, this statute is broad in its reach, extending to all persons in the immediate vicinity of a Riot or an Unlawful Assembly rather than being restricted, as it could be, to active participants therein.

5. Disorderly Conduct

The newly-styled offense of Disorderly Conduct¹³⁹⁴ can be committed in any of seven ways. This offense, a simple misdemeanor,¹³⁹⁵ represents a consolidation of several pre-revised crimes,¹³⁹⁶ both with and without change, as well as two new types of punishable activity. This offense fills the void created when only one or two persons engage in disruptive conduct which otherwise would constitute Riot or Unlawful Assembly (except for the three or more persons requirement).

Two of these alternatives, "public" fighting¹³⁹⁷ and disturbing a meeting or other lawful assembly,¹³⁹⁸ were incorporated into the new Criminal Code without change. Three others incorporate some changes. These include Disorderly Conduct: (1) by making unlawful noise near a hospital or house and causing unreasonable distress to occupants thereof;¹³⁹⁹ (2) by making knowingly false reports of catastrophes;¹⁴⁰⁰ and (3) by knowingly and publicly desecrating the United States flag.¹⁴⁰¹

One of the two new types of Disorderly Conduct involves directing abusive epithets or any threatening gesture at another, knowing (or reasonably believing) that a violent reaction is likely to be provoked.¹⁴⁰² This crime has been described as "an incitement to disorderly conduct."¹⁴⁰³ The other new crime consists of unauthorized obstruction of a public way, with the intent to prevent or hinder its use.¹⁴⁰⁴

Unlike Riot and Unlawful Assembly, the crime of Disorderly Conduct does not have any minimal numerical requirements regarding participants therein. Indeed, six of the seven types of Disorderly Conduct can be committed by a sole actor.

Only unlawful fighting in a public place or in or near any lawful assembly "requires" more than one participant. Strictly speaking, this type of conduct can also be punishable as participation in a Riot (a much more serious offense),¹⁴⁰⁵ when three or more persons are involved and their group violence is directed at others. The choice of the particular charging statute (i.e., Riot or Disorderly Conduct) in this situation is strictly a matter of prosecutorial discretion.¹⁴⁰⁶

1405. Riot is an aggravated misdemeanor punishable by a jail term of up to two years or a fine of up to $5,000, or both. Disorderly Conduct is merely a simple misdemeanor punishable by a jail term of up to thirty days or a fine of up to $100 but not both.
